DORAN CALLS ON STATES TO END DRY LAXITY; LAYS BLAME ON PUBLIC OPINION

Jones Reaches Highest Pinnacle of Golf World

BRITISH AMATEUR TITLE COMPLETES WORLD CONQUEST

7-and-6 Victory Over Wethered in 36-Hole Final Gives Atlantan Unparalled Record.

IS ONLY PLAYER TO WIN 4 CROWNS

Crowd of 12,000 Sees Bobby Conquer British-er With Ease — Was "Most Coveted" Victory.

BY FRANK H. KING.
Associated Press Staff Writer.

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland, May 31. (AP)—Bobby Jones today completed his golfing diadem by winning the British amateur championship, which he has long coveted, by a convincing defeat of Roger Wethered, 7-up and 6 to play in the 36-hole final.

All the jewels of golf now have sparkled from Bobby's crown. He is the only man who has ever won the open and amateur titles of both the United States and Great Britain.

They gave him the cup on the terrace of the Royal and Ancient Clubhouse this evening with all the patriarchs of golf gathered there.

12,000 See Match.

The final between Jones and Wethered, with 12,000 trying to see the shots, was the climax of a great week of golf in fine bracing Scotch weather and with enthusiastic galleries trailing over the famous links where putts have been missed for 500 years.

Nearly 300 matches have been played this week—all free—for St. Andrews is a public course and there is no admission fee. Never have the golf loving Scots had such a good time as they had watching Jones climb, round by round, over Englishmen, Scotsmen and Americans, including the amateur champions of Great Britain and the United States, and the captain of the British Walker cup team as a final opponent.

Wethered was a worthy opponent and great sportsman. Although the tide was against him all the way, he never seemed worried or harrassed and played his normal game, which was good, but not good enough.

Two Under Fours.

Jones played 30 holes in two under fours and there is the story of the 1930 British amateur final.

The former British amateur champion held the American open champion level for the first nine holes, with each one under par. Jones won five of the next seven holes and Wethered rallied with a great birdie at the 17th to win and go to luncheon four down, when he had been five behind. The Briton won the first hole in the afternoon when the American was stymied and seemed about to win the second when Jones made one of his few bad drives of the week. It was also his last. The visitor, however, seemed always to have a great shot in his bag when needed and he recovered with an iron good enough to place him in position to win the hole after it seemed lost.

Wethered reduced the lead to three at the 6th but it was the last chance he had against the machine-like precision of the American's game.

Wild Tee Shots.

The home player's wild tee shots cost him dearly in the morning and forced him to struggle to keep within reasonable distance of his opponent. In the afternoon his long game steadied but his loose play on the green ruined his chances and play ended on the 30th when a missed putt by Wethered from three feet.

"I didn't drive or putt well today," said Wethered tonight. "Somehow, or other, I seemed to pull every ball off line, but Bobby Jones is a great golfer who may put any one off his driving. Everyone does it and I had my bad lapse in the morning. But I did not play so badly and would have won from many other golfers. All may Jones drove magnificently and I envy him his long game and his fine touch on the greens."

"I was lucky to win," was Bobby's comment.

Jones' victory was popular with the shots. They swarmed after his shots and climbed on each other's shoulders. Many placed their youngsters on their heads and had the story of the putting played.

When the finish came, the crowds engulfed Bobby like wild tribesmen. Half a dozen Scotch bobbies rescued him and escorted him back to the clubhouse, more than a mile away, for the match ended at the 12th hole, far out on the neck of the links.

Jones received the cup he wanted most of all from the hands of Colonel R. G. M. Skene, captain of the Royal and Ancient Club, who called attention to the fact that the new champ-

Perfection Itself, Says Darwin of Bob

THE CHAMPION.

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland, May 31.—Bobby Jones has done it!

What is more, has done in handsomely, for he beat Roger Wethered seven up and six to play.

We have always known here that Jones was a different man in a 36-hole match from the comparatively human and vulnerable Bobby that we knew in the 18-hole matches. Today we had full proof of it. He began by completely missing a pitch to the first hole so that the ball actually stopped short of Swilcan burn and he got his half with a good run up and putt.

That was just about the only symptom of human frailty we were destined to see in him during the entire thirty holes. He soon settled down to his victorious stride and gave such an exhibition of flawless accuracy in striking as I have never seen before.

Bobby's Mottoes.

He clearly had two mottoes: One, "Safety first," the other, "Shoot par at them and they all crack." He seemed so fond of Old Friend Par that he could hardly bear to beat him when he had the chance. If he had a shortish putt to get a par figure he always holed it, but three times at least he had a four-footer to beat par and each time missed it.

After playing sixteen holes in the morning he had fourteen fours, and two threes. Could he get around this famous St. Andrews without a five?

Wethered being at the time five down, rightly took every risk and played his second shot straight at the tiny road hole green that is beset by trouble. Fortune favored this brave effort for the ball hopped past the bunker with only inches to spare and lay four yards from the hole.

Wonder Shot.

So now Bobby had every incentive to try for a four. He too went straight to the green, but was caught in a road bunker under the green. The crowd solemnly moved away from the edge of the green for hundreds of balls had been dislodged from that bunker only to trickle over into the road.

Bobby smiled at these preparations to expedite his doom and then played a most wonderful shot, half blasting and left the ball four feet from the hole.

Then alas! Alack! He missed that little putt and a five had crept in his score after all. So in the end he was around in 71; 15 fours, two threes on two short holes and that one five. He had holed one putt of eight or nine feet and missed three short ones.

Effortless Play.

It was a most sublimely effortless performance and made golf look childishly easy. In the afternoon he was out in 36 and started home 3-3-4. So for the whole day he was three under fours and I suppose that with his severe standard of self criticism he would say that he putted rather badly. My stock of superlatives is inadequate. Those are the facts and I will leave the adjectives to others.

The match crumbled rather quickly but just at the end it was much more exciting than the score would show and for nearly all the time Wethered made a very gallant fight. His driving looked loose and unsteady beside Jones,' but for two or three crooked ones in the morning was in fact quite efficient. His iron play was admirable; crisp, bold and accurate. He lost nothing by comparison even with Bob's play. His approach putts were all well struck.

Where he failed was where he has been successful all week in his short and middle length putts. Something was wrong and I think he was letting his body go as he struck the ball. At any rate he had good chances at the beginning of both rounds and he could not take advantage of them. They would not have changed the ultimate end, but would have postponed it, I fancy until near home hole.

Great Start.

So much for generalities. Now for a brief account of the run of the game. Wethered took three putts at the third hole and laid a grand pitch and run-up shot out of the heather dead for a three at the sixth. Otherwise he played perfectly and Jones played perfectly all the time. Both were out in 35 and the match was square at the turn.

Wethered then took three putts and lost the tenth. The next two were halved. Then came the first sign that the strain was telling on the underdog.

Wethered made a few slips, not bad ones, but slips that cost shots. He took three fives for the 13th, 14th and 15th and lost all three, for Bobby just clicked out four after four with automatic precision. Then Wethered made a real mistake. He sliced out of bounds at the 16th and that was five down. I already described the 17th and Bobby lunched four up.

Dramatic Holes.

The first two holes after lunch were intensely dramatic. Both had perfect pitches to the first hole. Jones, 7 feet away, pulled his first putt, which missed and ran 2 feet past the cup. Wethered also missed and left a dead stymie, at which Jones failed. We had thought of a half in three and our man had won 4-5.

At the second Jones made his one bad drive, a vicious hook which might well have gone out of bounds, but which hit spectators and ended on the road. Even so, it was a horrid predicament and there were great hopes that Wethered might bring Jones' lead down to two.

Bobby then played his second, which was the supremely great shot of the match and put the ball on the green. He followed this by nearly holing a long putt and laying Wethered a stymie. Wethered had to get past. He played the shot well, but it ran a bare three feet past Jones' ball, then missed the cup. So the hole that was to have given him a real fighting chance had sealed his doom.

And So He Won.

I need not describe the rest. Wethered holed a mighty putt on the sixth and was again only three down, but was stymied at the seventh and then at last gave hitch, while Bobby went serenely on, with his voctory drawing ever nearer.

The end came with a short putt missed by Wethered, and the huge crowd swallowed up Bobby and cheered and cheered. He came home by the road under an escort of policemen and stewards, and there was another great demonstration at the prize-giving.

St. Andrews loses Bobby, but no more than Bobby loses St. Andrews. Links and champion are superbly worthy of one another.

STATE ROAD BOARD ANNOUNCES PLANS FOR NEXT 2 YEARS

Completion of Work To Give Atlanta Hard Surfaced Connection With Leading Georgia Cities.

The state highway board plans early construction of a series of projects which, radiating from Atlanta like spokes from a wheel, will give the city a hard surfaced connection with every neighboring city of consequence by the close of 1931.

Detailed plans of the board for the Atlanta area were divulged by J. W. Barnett, state highway board chairman, Saturday. Contracts for several of the projects already have been let by the board and their completion by autumn is expected. Contracts for the others will be awarded as soon as funds are available and their construction is approved by federal engineers.

Foremost in the list of projects planned for the Atlanta area is the $500,000 project between Gainesville and Baldwin, which will be completed by late summer. It will give Atlanta a hard surfaced road, by way of Cornelia and Asheville, to New York.

Complete Work in 1931.

State highway No. 13, from Georgia toward Greenville, will be paved in 1931, giving the city an alternative hard surfaced route to the east.

A contract for the paving state highway No. 8, between Lawrenceville and Winder, already has been awarded, as has a contract for grading the same road from Winder east to a concrete road running west from Athens. Completion of the projects will give Atlanta an excellent road to Athens, hard surfaced almost its entire length.

State route No. 10, which affords an alternative route to Athens by way of Stone Mountain and Monroe, will be paved by the close of 1931. A contract for a portion of the paving will be awarded in July.

Another project which will be awarded in July is from Avondale toward Conyers. A contract for paving a section of the same road, which leads to Augusta, lying south of Social Circle, has already been let. These two projects will give Atlanta a paved road to within a few miles of Madison.

The road from Thompson, eastward through Harlem to Augusta, will be contracted for June 26.

Highway to Seaport.

By the close of 1931, Mr. Barnett said, the road from Macon to Savannah will be paved in its entirety, giving Atlanta a hard surfaced connection with the Georgia seaport. The paved road will go through Jeffersonville, Dublin, Swainsboro, Graymont and Statesboro.

A concrete road from Chipley south to join paving running north from Columbus will be completed within the next 90 days, by way of Fairburn, Newnan, Moreland, Greenville, Harris and Chipley. The project will give access by paved road to Columbus.

Contract for paving the Bankhead highway to Austell will be let on June 26, and within 60 days another contract will be awarded for paving the highway from Austell to Douglasville.

Mr. Barnett said that the plans of the board call for paving the Bankhead highway, both in its Bremen and Carrollton branches in 1931. Connecting with Alabama highways at the state line, the projects will give a convenient connection with Birmingham.

Contract for grading the section of state highway No. 5, immediately north of Marietta, has already been let by the board.

Atlanta Girl's Wage Must Be $19; Survey

CHICAGO, May 31.—(AP)—A working girl in Chicago must earn no less than $20 a week to keep her health and dress attractively, the Y. W. C. A. has determined after a survey. Some other cities are less expensive. To subsist on $20 in Chicago, the working girl must live in some co-operative dwelling or club, else her apartment, shared with a roommate, would bring the budget up to $25.

The survey fixed the reasonable living wage of a girl in Los Angeles and Kansas City at $16; at $19 in Atlanta, $20 in Boston and $21 in Philadelphia. Here is the budget planned for the twenty-dollar girl in Chicago:

Fixed expenses: Room rent with 2 meals in girls' club, $8.25; lunches, $1.30; carfare, $1.20.

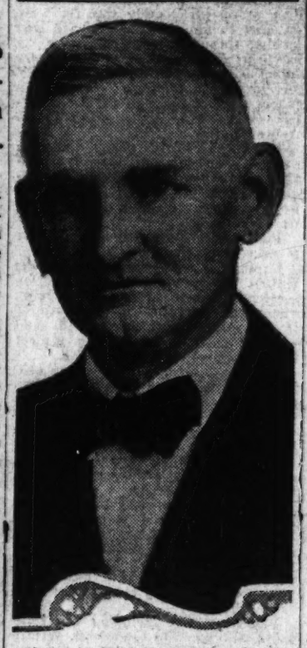

Flexible expenses: Laundry and cleaning, 60c; clothing $5.00; cosmetics, 35c; doctor and dentist, 50c; church, 20c; gifts, 20c; education and recreation, 75c; savings, $1.15.

Survey of the cost of living for the working girl in Atlanta was placed at $20 in a recent survey of leading Atlanta social service agencies.

Among them were executives of the Atlanta Retail Credit Company, the College Placement bureau and employment agencies for women.

McBride's Brother Says Funds Hidden

Heads Georgia Bar

A. W. Cozart, of Columbus, Ga., noted for his wit and eloquence, was Saturday elected president of the Georgia Bar Association.

Charges G. O. P. Paid Dry Workers in West and League Head Hid $25,000 of Kresge Gift.

WASHINGTON, May 31.—(UN) Representative LaGuardia, wet republican, New York, made public tonight a letter received from Emmet McBride, of Salineville, Ohio, containing assertions that his brothers, Dr. F. Scott McBride, general superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, and D. L. McBride state superintendent of the Minnesota Anti-Saloon League, had failed to report campaign contributions to congressional investigating committees.

Emmet McBride said he is a United Presbyterian clergyman, but taught school last winter.

LaGuardia said he had forwarded the letter to Senator Blaine, republican, Wisconsin, member of the Caraway lobby investigating committee, and expressed hope the committee "would follow up the statements." Blaine was out of town today, and his office would make no comment.

Emmet McBride's letter said his two brothers were stockholders and officers in a fruit juice company not now operating, of which E. A. Scroggin, Illinois league superintendent, was president. He said F. Scott McBride is associated with several league state superintendents and Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of the Methodist Church, South, in land deals in deals in Missouri and Alabama.

His letter further said he had been told by F. Scott McBride that Stanley Kresge had contributed $25,000 to the league superintendent after the Houston convention in 1928 on condition it be not reported for some time in the future and that this alleged contribution does not appear on the league account turned over to the "prohibition investigating committee."

He also said D. L. McBride had told him the republican organization of Minnesota had taken over and were paying all of the Minnesota league's men for full time in the last six weeks of the 1928 presidential campaign. He said his brother explained $8,000 was to be provided by the republicans for this work, but Emmet asserted it was not reported to the investigating committee by the league.

Emmet McBride said he was ready to testify to statements in his letter before any congressional committee under oath.

DRY LEAGUER DENIES BROTHER'S CHARGES.

DES MOINES, Iowa, May 31.—(UN)—Dr. F. Scott McBride, general superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, denied here tonight charges made by his brother, Emmet McBride, that he had withheld information about a $25,000 contribution to the league from Stanley Kresge and that he had speculated in Alabama land.

The different matters referred to in that statement are absolutely "ridiculous, false and without any foundation whatsoever," McBride said. "The statement" he referred to was a letter his brother wrote to Representative LaGuardia, republican, New York, calling upon him to investigate the charges.

The news was received with cheers and applause, and a cablegram of congratulations was dispatched immediately to Scotland. Jones is chairman of the relief committee of the bar association.

New Head of Bar Association.

A. W. Cozart, the new president, who succeeded Rembert Marshall, of Atlanta, is a well-known attorney of Columbus and is known in many states as a public speaker of note. He was born in London county, Tenn., June 14, 1870, and was graduated from Hiwassee college in 1888. In 1801, he was admitted to the Georgia bar and was elected the first recorder ever to serve Muscogee county. After retiring from office, he devoted all of his time to his practice.

112 Babies Born At Grady in May

Girls led the boys, 57 to 55, in smashing the all-time record of maternity cases for a single month at Grady hospital during May.

The 112th baby to be born arrived at 5:20 o'clock Saturday afternoon. The mother is Mrs. J. F. Mayfield, of 505 Neely street, East Point.

The previous high record at Grady was established in March, when 108 babies were born.

GEORGIA AT WORK, FIGURES GATHERED BY CENSUS REVEAL

Optimism Expressed as Data Discloses That Unemployment Situation in State Is Not Acute.

Optimism over the unemployment situation in Georgia was expressed Saturday by census supervisors, who said data gathered by their forces showed that most Georgians were at work.

Figures on unemployment were sent to the bureau of census at Washington by most of the supervisors before they were notified they could announce their findings locally. However, the supervisors were virtually all of the opinion that the unemployment situation in this state was by no means acute.

The figures of Atlanta were not available here, but Dr. Elizabeth Broach, census supervisor, said the percentage of persons idle here was small.

Columbus, a manufacturing city, showed less than 3 per cent of its citizens out of work. C. M. Young, supervisor of census, said that on April 2 there were 1,716 persons idle in Columbus with a population of 43,073. This percentage was unusual in face of the fact that Columbus has 14 large textile mills, indicating the factories were running with good crews.

Mr. Young said that conditions has improved since April 2 and doubted if the percentage now would exceed 2 1-2 per cent.

The Athens district is mostly agricultural and the supervisor said the "matter of unemployment in the ten counties of this district was of little importance."

He pointed out that most of the farm laborers who were idle when the census was taken in the spring went to work soon afterwards, planting and cultivating.

The same situation existed in the sixth district, with Newnan as headquarters, Paul S. Barrett, supervisor, reported "there was very little unemployment in this district." The fifth district also is largely agricultural. He estimated that less than 1,000 persons were idle in LaGrange, Manchester, Carrollton, Banning, Sargent and Douglasville.

Plants in the Rome and Gainesville districts have been running on good schedules and indications were that unemployment there was slight.

There were no figures available from the Savannah district.

POLING TO SPEAK AT YOUTH RALLY

Address by National Figure Will Feature Huge Meeting at Auditorium.

Sponsored by virtually every leading civic, educational and religious organization in the city and featured by a program in which Dr. Daniel A. Poling, world-known champion of Christian activities among young persons, is principal speaker, a vast citywide youth rally will be staged in the city auditorium at 3 o'clock this afternoon in the presence of an imposing array of Atlantans.

It is expected that several thousand young people, together with adult visitors, will attend the rally to hear the message of the noted author, orator and religious leader, and the program is replete with rousing hymns appropriate to the occasion. Instrumental music will be under the direction of Dr. Charles A. Sheldon, Jr., city organist, while John D. Hoffman will conduct the song service.

Dr. Poling's first appearance in Atlanta will be in the auditorium of Agnes Scott college Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, when he delivers the baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class and friends of that institution.

After the auditorium rally he will return to Decatur and deliver an evening sermon in the Agnes Scott auditorium under the auspices of the eight Decatur churches and the Union of Young People's League at 8 o'clock. A feature of this service will be a Young People's chorus composed of the singers of the different churches.

It is the conviction of leaders in young people's work here that no one could have been secured as the speaker for Atlanta's first great youth rally better qualified than Dr. Poling. Leader of the National Radio Youth conference and international president of Christian Endeavor, the speaker likewise is known internationally as editor of the Christian Herald, an outstanding figure in the cause of prohibition, and the author of numerous volumes.

Dr. Poling will be introduced at the rally by Dr. J. R. McCain, president of Agnes Scott college, where the distinguished visitor will earlier in the

Tokyo Experiences Pronounced 'Quake

TOKYO, June 1.—(Sunday)—(AP) An earthquake, the longest and strongest of this year, was felt in this city at 2:59 a. m. today. Clocks were stopped and frightened people ran from their houses. A half hour later there had been no reports of serious damage nor of casualties.

Japan in the past has experienced a long series of devastating earthquakes with great loss of life. The earthquake and fire of September 1, 1923, the most disastrous in modern history, caused a loss of 120,000 lives and property damage of about $2,500,000,000, about Sagami bay on which Tokyo is situated. It was estimated that 100,000 persons died in Tokyo in the collapse of approximately 10,000 buildings.

WET SENTIMENT PLACES OBSTACLE IN PATH, HE SAYS

Director Admits "Large Minority" If Not Actual Majority Is Opposed to Prohibition Practices.

OBLIGATION RESTS ON SEVERAL STATES

Says 36 States Were Already Bone Dry and Other 12 Had Dry Spots Before U. S. Stepped In.

WASHINGTON, May 31.—(AP)—Public opinion was described today by Prohbition Commissioner Doran as the deterrent to that complete enforcement of the dry laws which could be accomplished if all the states would co-operate with the federal authorities.

In a monograph contending that the states and the federal government had concurrent obligations to enforce prohibition, Doran said that in states where ther was lax co-operation "unwholesome influences are at work to prevent enforcement."

In New York city, Doran said, there was close connection between the lawbreakers and the police and a tendency of "city officials to hamper federal enforcement officers in many obscure ways."

First among his list of causes for lack of enforcement there, he placed:

"A strong sentiment against the prohibition law, not on the part of the majority, perhaps, but on the part of a large minority."

Doran said that a double obligation rested upon the states to aid in the enforcement of the law—"The inherent police power of the state to regulate liquor traffic and the power conferred on the state by the United States in the eighteenth amendment.

"Laws provide plenty of authority for any state official to proceed legally against any violator of the national prohibition act," he added. "The fact that in those states that have no enforcement act and in some states that do have enforcement acts the duty is not performed does not alter the obligation of the state enforcement officials in the least."

Reviewing the dry statutes, Doran said prohibition of intoxicating liquor did not start with the passage of the eighteenth amendment but had been enforced by 32 states through "bone dry" laws for several years before and in 16 others through local option. This, he said, brought a total of 85,000,000 of the nation's population under prohibition. The Volstead act, he continued, was a composite of the prohibition laws of the states which already had. successfully enforced them.

The state laws, the commissioner said, together with the concurrent power conferred by the eighteenth amendment, provide ample vehicle for enforcing the dry statutes if the 200,000 state, county and city police officers co-operate with the 2,000 prohibition agents of the nation.

Doran reviewed the laws of the states having prohibition statutes and described the co-operation received in

4 TELEPHONE EMPLOYES GIVEN BRAVERY AWARDS

Alabama Girl Also Gets Vail Medal for Conspicuous Service.

NEW YORK, May 31.—(AP)—Four telephone employes who distinguished themselves in the Cleveland (Ohio) clinic fire of May 15, 1929, have been awarded gold and silver medals by the Theodore N. Vail Memorial fund. All worked for the Ohio Telephone Company.

One of the gold medals, the committee of award announced today, went to Miss Gladys I. Gibson, operator, who lost her life in the fire because she remained at her post to gasp out the alarm which brought assistance. More than 120 persons died in the fire and explosions which followed it.

Other awards connected with the Cleveland fire were to Gerald T. Mahaffey, district traffic superintendent; Benjamin G. Spaeth, district plant superintendent, and James J. Roonan, district installation foreman, silver medals with cash award of $250.

All participated in rescue work and, working in relays, maintained telephone communication with the clinic during the fire.

Among award winners elsewhere were Miss Vivian Harper, operator for the Elba Telephone Company, Elba, Ala., and Mrs. Myrtle Dorothy Hull, agency chief operator of the Southwestern Bell Telephone Company, Almbale, Kan.

Waterworks Experts To Honor Atlantans

Colonel Robert M. Clayton, for 30 years chief of construction of the borough of Atlanta and constructor of the first municipal water filtering station in the United States; William F. Wilcox and the superintendent of construction for the waterworks department, William Rapp, left Atlanta Saturday to attend the American Waterworks association meeting at St. Louis, where they will be honored with medals for 30 years continuous membership in the organization.

All three are well-known Atlantans. The convention opens Monday.

Colonel Clayton constructed the filter system in 1887 when the waterworks system was at Lakewood, and he is considered the dean of waterworks engineers of Atlanta.

The association now has 3,000 members but in 1900 there were only 36. All living members of the organization who have held membership for 30 years will be given medals, and Atlanta is said to be the only city in the entire world to have three of that number.

Colonel Clayton is now president of the Hibernia Savings Building and Loan association and vice president of the American Savings bank. He received his early training while attached to the Confederate forces during the Civil War as an engineer.

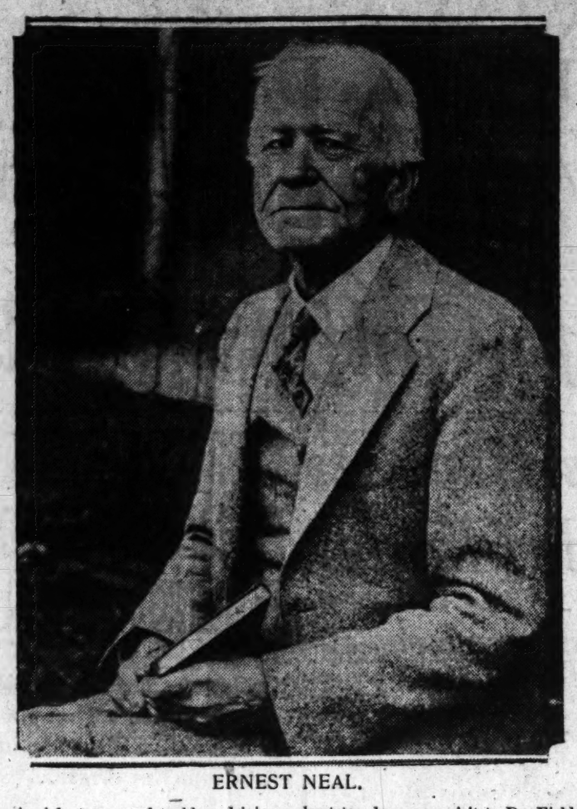

The St. Louis convention will be the fiftieth held by the association and delegates from many parts of the world will attend.

Foot Crushed, Youth Faces Amputation

Rataree Saturday afternoon was visiting a friend, J. V. Barton, on Gun Club road, while the latter was operating a mowing machine drawn by a horse. Rataree is said to have brushed against the horse, which became frightened, jumped, and caused the machine to catch Rataree's leg, crushing his left foot.

ERNEST NEAL.

A violent wave of reckless driving, including the killing Friday night of Ernest W. Lynch, of 471 Glenwood avenue, by a hit-and-run driver, continued Saturday when another hit-and-run driver claimed for his victim Ernest Neal, poet laureate of Georgia.

While injuries to Mr. Neal were not dangerous, his friend and physician, Dr. J. W. Field, said late Saturday that he would be confined for several days. He was struck on the right leg as he was attempting to cross Fairlie street at Walton and carried to Grady by Dr. Field. After treatment there he was sent to Dr. Field's home, 982 Crescent avenue, in the ambulance of Harry G. Poole.

Dr. Neal, who is 61 years old and a resident of Calhoun, was made poet laureate of Georgia at the regular session, in 1927, of the general assembly of Georgia following the death of Frank L. Stanton. His poems have appeared frequently in the pages of The Constitution and other publications. He had been in Atlanta for about ten days on a visit to Dr. Field.

Police information about the Neal accident is that the car which struck the Georgian was a small sedan in which three white youths were riding. Efforts to locate the car and driver were being continued Saturday night by officers.

Another accident victim of Saturday was Mrs. E. E. Allen, of 270 Luckie street, who was knocked down at the corner of Luckie and Hull streets by a car driven by A. D. Seals, of 1336 Fairview road. Mrs. Allen was hurried to Grady and treated for painful injuries about the head and bruises about the body and discharged.

No case was made against Seals, police investigation disclosing that his car collided with another being driven by Olen Smith, 563 Jett street, who was attempting to make a left turn into Hull while going in the same direction as Seals, east on Luckie. The Seals car struck Mrs. Allen in an attempt to avert the collision.

Veteran Undergoes Third Operation

Charles Nash Johnson Lee, 88-year-old veteran of the Civil War who fought in the battle of Bull Run and lost part of the bone in his right leg in the battle of Manassas while serving with the seventh Virginia regiment, Saturday at Grady hospital underwent the third operation of his life, one in which white-clad nurses and modern anaesthetics were used.

He was admitted to Grady Friday and Saturday a minor operation known as "suprapubic" was performed on him. His second operation undergone by the staunch veteran of the War Between the States, was about two months ago. It was also a minor one. At the battle of Manassas when the bone in his right leg was shot away, the wound was dressed without modern aids of science.

Up until January he resided with his son, William Lee, and his daughter, Mrs. Maggie Flemming, at 880 Myrtle street, but at that time he entered the Old Soldiers' home. Saturday night he was in the best of spirits and assured all listeners that he would return to his comrades at the home sometime today.

WILLIAM E. EASON DIES AT RESIDENCE

While his family was absent Saturday afternoon, William E. Eason, 59, retired architect draftsman, died at his home, 443 Ponce de Leon avenue and his body was found shortly after 3 o'clock by his daughter, Miss Louise Eason, when she returned from work.

When a physician arrived it was learned that Mr. Eason had been dead about two hours and that he had suffered a heart attack. Though he had been in ill health for seven years, he had not retired from active business life until two months ago. At that time he was connected with J. P. Womack and Son.

Mr. Eason came to Atlanta from Nashville, Tenn., 15 years ago and has attended the First Christian church on Pryor street since he established his home in Atlanta; though his church membership was in the Vine Street Christian church of Nashville.

He is survived by his widow and two daughters, Miss Louise and Miss Gertrude Eason of Atlanta; and two brothers, Seldon and Samuel Eason, both of Nashville, Tenn. Funeral arrangements will be announced later by H. M. Patterson and Son.

Last Services Today For Victim of Poison

Last rites will be held for Mrs. Nell May Miller, 21-year-old wife of Walter T. Miller, of 1058 Hampton street, N. W., at 2 o'clock this afternoon from the residence with the Rev. W. M. Albert officiating and interment will be in Hollywood cemetery. Mrs. Miller died at a local hospital Friday night from the effects of the contents of a bottle of poison which is said to have been self-administered.

According to her husband, Mrs. Miller locked herself in the bathroom shortly after 9 o'clock when the couple had returned from a relative's home. He became alarmed because she had locked the door and went to an outside window to peer in. His wife had a bottle of disinfectant in her hand but pulled down the shade so that he did not see what followed.

On returning to the inside of the home his wife informed him that she had taken the poison. Taken to a hospital, she died in less than an hour. Mr. Miller could give no reason for her act, but expressed the belief that she had meant only to frighten him.

In addition to her husband, she is survived by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Bright, and a 10-month-old son, Arnold Miller. Awtry & Lowndes have arrangements in charge.

McCord Residence Destroyed by Fire

The Stewart avenue home in Hapeville of Robert B. McCord, director of the Children's Aid Society of Georgia and member of the Hapeville city council, was destroyed by fire.

The family fled from the house when Mr. McCord, awakened by crackling flames and the smell of smoke, quickly aroused members of the household.

The fire department was summoned from East Point but firemen were unable to do more than prevent spread of the flames.

The fire is believed to have started in the attic, as the roof was already caving in when the blaze was discovered.

3 DEAD, 13 MISSING IN YACHT DISASTER

52 Passengers Accounted For; Number Aboard Is the Question.

SANTA MONICA, Cal., May 31.—(AP)—Three persons were known to be dead, 13 were officially listed as missing and many more were recovering from shock and exposure today as a result of the foundering off Santa Monica late yesterday of the fishing boat Ameco. Meanwhile coast guard boats searched the wind-lashed waters for bodies of the missing.

The Ameco suddenly listed in the gale-whipped billows when many of its passengers are reported to have rushed to the lee side of the craft to avoid a heavy spray. The boat carried a holiday crowd to the deep sea fishing smacks ranged along the coast.

Fifty-two survivors had been accounted for late today. They were picked up by other fishing boats that came to the rescue.

The known dead:

John W. Lockhard, barber's apprentice, Pasadena.

Miss Margaret Keller, 18, Santa Monica, and C. C. Brnett, barber, Los Angeles.

The Ameco was 45 feet long. It capsized while it headed for shore in a squall, said Captain William Lightfoot, the skipper, one of the survivors.

N. A. Law, proprietor of a beach drug store, presumably was the first on land to see the mishap. He was looking through a telescope when he saw the Ameco pitch its passengers into the water. He telephoned police and life guard stations. Shore boats put out at full speed to aid the stricken vessel. The Ameco sank in 75 feet of water.

Federal officials, police and the county coroner began a triple investigation. One report being investigated was that there were not enough life preservers. Another said the boat was overloaded.

Police said there were but 69 life preservers carried on the craft.

Captain A. S. Kennedy, of the United States steamboat inspection service, after a preliminary survey announced he intended to determine if the Ameco was overloaded, and whether there had been any neglect in the manner of her handling.

County Coroner Frank Nance said he was checking the report of Captain Lightfoot, who had declared that the sudden squall, flinging spray aboard, had sent the passengers rushing to the lee side, causing a heavy list. A following wave, he said, struck broadside of the tilting boat, throwing her over.

Only the presence of another fishing boat, the Freedom, nearby, prevented a greater mishap. This boat arrived in time to rescue many victims floundering in the water and picking others from precarious finger holds on the slippery sides of the overturned hull.

Smaller boats, including the Palisades, also raced to the rescue. Within a short time the majority of the survivors had been brought ashore. The Ameco overturned shortly after 4 p. m.

Some survivors told of seeing a few of their companions drawn under the waves.

SURVIVORS TELL OF BOAT DISASTER.

SANTA MONICA, Cal., May 31.—(AP)—A vivid description of the disturbed sea which rose up to swallow the little fishing boat Ameco yesterday was given by survivors today following recovery from their harrowing experiences.

"Suddenly we felt the boat rise as though it were on an elevator," said W. E. Jost, of Los Angeles. "My wife and I were in the stern of the Ameco and I guess that was the reason we did not see the wave that hit us.

"The next thing we knew we were in the water. Luckily, my wife came up right at my elbow and I managed to pull her to the hull and hold her there until we were rescued by the Freedom, another fishing boat."

R. L. Brown, of Alhambra, saw the wave coming. "It seemed to poise above us for a long time and then we went up almost to its crest before we went over. Everybody was in the water, struggling and screaming, and a lot of them went down pretty quickly. Nobody had time to prepare for it."

The official statement of Captain William Lightfoot, who was in charge of the boat, placed the blame upon a sudden squall and the rush of passengers to the lee side of the vessel.

Education in Safety Urged for Children

Although there has been a gradual increase in attention shown by legislatures to health and safety in the public schools of the country there is still a great need for safety education to enable children to protect themselves on streets and highways, Jere Wells, superintendent of the Fulton county schools and a director of the Atlanta Motor Club, said in a statement Saturday.

Mr. Wells' statement was made in connection with the national safety program launched by the American Automobile Association, with which the Atlanta Motor Club is affiliated, through which millions of children are to be given safety lessons this year.

He pointed out that the growth in the total number of automobiles has been so rapid that there is now one car registered for every child enrolled in the public schools.

Moody To Protest London Riot Story

FORT WORTH, Texas, May 31.—(UN)—Governor Dan Moody announced today he will send Ranger Captain Tom Hickman to London, England, to protest publication of a London newspaper story which he said was "a libel on the womanhood of Texas."

The story told of the recent Sherman, Texas, riots in which a negro was burned to death when a mob fired the courthouse.

"The story said that women had removed their dresses to add fuel to the flames," Moody said.

"It also said that I ordered the rangers not to shoot a white man to save a black one, which was entirely without foundation," he added.

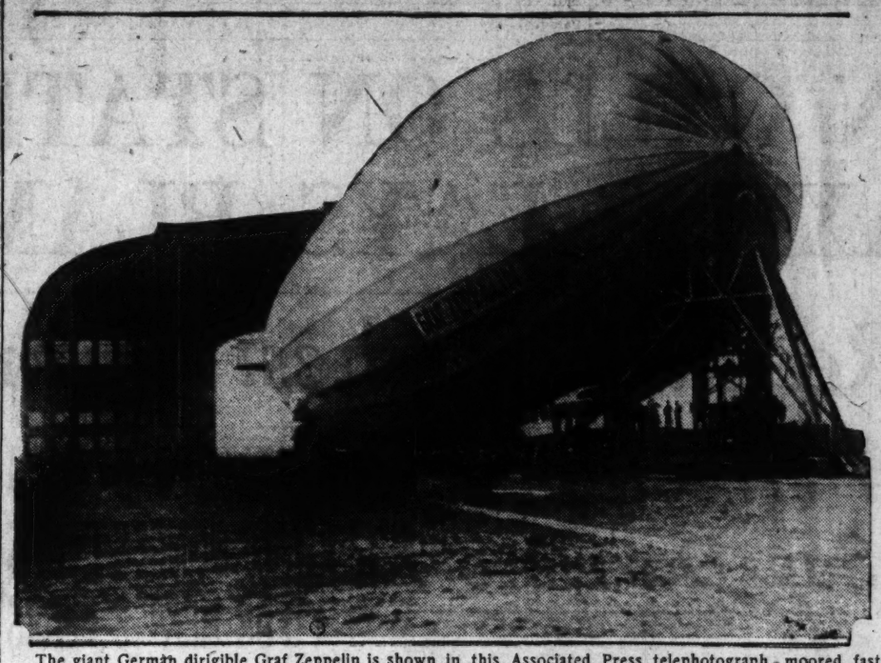

20,000 Carolinians Late With Radio Tax

COLUMBIA, S. C., May 31.—(UN) The sheriff's a-gonna git some 20,000 South Carolina radio sets, if the owners don't look out.

The 1930 general assembly imposed a tax of one dollar a set, estimating there were 30,000 sets in the state. Tonight, the last night for payment, only about $10,000 had been received.

A fine of $50 and seizure of sets for non-payment by June 1 is provided in the law.

Graf Zeppelin at Lakehurst Hangar

NAVAL AIR STATION, LAKEHURST, N. J., May 31.—(AP)—The Graf Zeppelin abdicated today, so far as this section of the world is concerned, its place as a modern wonder of science and became a prosaic addition to twentieth century transportation.

The passengers debarking from the big bag, almost half of them veterans of one or more previous Graf cruises, reflected the nonchalance over its latest feat which was indicated by the presence on the landing field of the meagerest handful of spectators that ever saw the Zeppelin come to earth here.

On its fourth visit to Lakehurst the Graf found its arrival accepted almost as a commonplace—as ordinary an event as the arrival of the Leviathan in New York harbor, or of the Twentieth Century or the Broadway Limited from Chicago.

Stormy? Dr. Hugo Eckener said the squall the Zeppelin hit last night off the middle Atlantic seaboard was the fiercest in his experience in the flying of lighter-than-air-craft. But the passengers regarded it as calmly as if it had been a bit of rough weather encountered by an ocean liner at sea, and said it was over much sooner.

Scenery? Thrills? Those subjects seemed as naive to the passengers as they would seem to a merchant coming to New York by train to confer on a business deal.

On the Graf's last visit, at the end of her world cruise, passengers were full of moving tales about the impressiveness of the country over which they had passed—tales they were under injunction not to tell. Today there was no such limitation upon their narratives but there seemed to be nothing unusual to tell.

The Graf arrived on schedule, its passengers came down the ladder from the cabin when it was berthed, and what was there to tell about? The trip? Not especially exciting or colorful, after a world tour; just another voyage between continents.

One might learn what South America thought about the pending tariff, or that the Graf's passengers went onto a prohibition basis when the ship came into United States territory—a fact not unrelated, some suggested, to the circumstance that the wine and champagne ran out just about that time.

But to talk about the ride seemed a bit callow—it was old stuff.

And in the metropolitan papers even of New York and Philadelphia, both close to Lakehurst, the news of Bobby Jones' victory at St. Andrews was as big or bigger than the story that the Graf had landed again at Lakehurst.

Suspect Is Arrested Hour After Robbery

Less than an hour after Will Cooksey, 69, of 244 Central avenue, was slugged into insensibility and robbed of $4 at the corner of Fair and Martin streets Saturday night, Fred Burns, 35, of 152 Fair street, was arrested by call officers and charged with the crime.

Cooksey was found in an unconscious condition and taken to Grady hospital, where he was revived and treatment given him for cuts on his head. He told attaches that he had been slugged and robbed. Call Officers Tom Glover and Virgil Whitley were assigned to the case and they arrested Burns at his home. When arrested Burns was in a clothes closet, they said.

He was charged with assault with intent to murder and robbery, and his case set to be heard at 2:30 o'clock June 2. Late Saturday night he was being held in default of a $1,000 bond, and refused to comment on the charges against him.

Manhole Explosion Injures Three Men

An explosion caused by a short circuit in a man hole of the Georgia Power Company Saturday morning seriously burned William T. Sneed and W. F. Thomas and slightly burned D. M. Smith, who were working on high voltage wires at Auburn avenue and Pryor street.

Sneed, residing at 864 Parkway drive, was burned about the head, face, chest and arms. Thomas, living at 476 Oakland street, was burned about the face and head and arms. Smith's slight burns were about the arms. The latter was on the street watching traffic while the two men were in the man hole.

The men were taken to a hospital and given treatment for the injuries. Officials of the power company said they were preparing to cut in service on the new telephone building at Auburn avenue and Ivy street when the accident occurred. Both Sneed and Thomas are expected to recover.

Venezuela To Pay Debt as Memorial

WASHINGTON, May 31.—(AP)—A new way of celebrating a national historic event has just been adopted by Venezuela. That country, to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the establishment of its independence from Spanish rule, which took place under leadership of Bolivar, has decided during the year to pay off its entire national debt.

The total sum involved amounts to $4,700,000.

Charming European Visitors

:: COTERIE OF JOURNALISTS PLEASED WITH ATLANTA ::

Depart for New Orleans

BY RUNA ERWIN.

"Auf wiederschen!"

A courtly bow—thirteen in unison—a few hurried moments while they boarded the train, a waving of hands as the Crescent Limited Saturday night moved westward for New Orleans, and Atlanta's visiting coterie of journalists of north Europe were gone.

This, in a casual manner, is an account of the impressions of Atlanta they carry with them, and, in a measure, of their memory which lingers in Atlanta.

The last comes first:

Charm of personality, courtliness of manner and savoir faire distinguish the gentlemen of Europe. Finished in culture, they are at home in any company. In Atlanta, cultured center of the old south, they fitted gracefully.

The conversation turns to books. They are acquainted with the wealth of literature of continental Europe. They have read Walt Whitman, Mark Twain, Sinclair Lewis and Upton Sinclair. A quotation from Charles Lamb falls unconsciously. They know us as they know themselves.

Let the talk come to science. They are abreast of the times. They know what their men and our men are doing. On politics. The intricacies of democracy and republicanism are no secret to them. How many of us know them? They know Mussolini; what is happening in Russia; the plight of the Balkan states.

Met Atlanta Society.

On only one occasion, Thursday afternoon at the home of the Howard Candlers, had Atlanta society opportunity to become acquainted with them. A group of Atlanta girls and matrons present met Felix Salten, Austrian novelist, and listened to his colorful conversation. Salten, a mystic, speaks in metaphor. He talks with symbols, gesticulating with his hands, smiling merrily.

And Georg Meri, tall, young, distinguished, handsome, the "baby" except for Georges Kirkoff, of Bulgaria, in the party. Meri speaks English, discourses on politics, history and architecture. He approves of American women.

Dr. Albert Oeri, of Switzerland, found difficulty with his English. "Fife dot-ters haf I dat spik English. Dey are in Swisserlund. What trouble! But these Americans—are charming."

The German delegation, Herr Beberadt, Dr. Ernest Feder and Professor Alfred Herrman, proved popular. Deep thinking men, profoundly interested in the rebirth of Germany. And S. Backlaund, of Sweden; Jaroslav Koudelaka, of Czechoslavia; T. Cnossen, of Holland, and S. Konstad, of Norway. All representative Europeans; they hold a woman's hand low—an American holds it high—when kissing it; and bow from the hip, in the continental way.

James B. Wharton, who is accompanying the party for "The Open Road," of New York, it developed, is the author of "Squad," a war book which eighteen months ago attained almost the eminence of a best seller. His latest book is "The Marsh Wife," laid on the shores of the Delaware bay in New Jersey.

Mr. Wharton, in 1925, was the sole representative of the North American Newspaper Alliance, which had exclusive rights in North America to the story of Roald Admundsen's and Lincoln Ellsworth's attempt to fly to the north pole.

He "covered" the story of the flight of their two ships, and the 25 days of suspense until they were heard from again. The ships were forced down and frozen in the ice. One was finally cut loose and carried the entire party back to Spitzbergen.

Lone Woman Present.

Friday night, at the formal banquet tendered the visitors at the Atlanta Biltmore hotel, this reporter was the lone feminine representative of Atlanta present. Vicariously she received the tributes designed for the women of Atlanta at large.

Urho Toivola, of Finland, gave his impressions of Atlanta and its people.

"To be received as you have received us in Atlanta has given us the greatest pleasure of our trip. Such hospitality! It does not happen in Europe. There is an aloofness toward strangers there; a barrier is built which prevents their feeling at home.

"The first night we were here twenty Atlanta men were at the dinner given us. In a few minutes I felt as though I had met and known them long before.

"I casually said that I would like a swim. The next day cards from your clubs were here, placing their facilities at our disposal.

"The voices of you southerners distinguish you. They are softer, more melodious than those of your northern countrymen. It was the first characteristic we noticed. The voices of the women here are infinitely softer.

"Your men's voices are warm. Do you know what a warm voice means? It is the voice of the orator. It has strength and sympathy in it.

"When I saw the Candler home Thursday afternoon I thought of the palaces of Europe. Its architecture, the art it contains, its magnificent library, make it a modern palace.

"But let me say this. In America it has been my observation, the rich men's homes are closer to those of the poor than in any other country. Surely much closer than were the palaces of the Italian nobles to the poor of that country.

"The resources of your civilization are open to rich and poor alike.

New Epoch.

"That, to my mind, is indicative of a new epoch, which is making itself felt in Europe, but which is more manifest in America.

"I do not mean a socialistic epoch, with all things open to everyone. America will never become a socialistic country. The feeling of responsibility in the minds of your rich, which induces them to leave their collections of art to the people, which prompts them to build villages of model homes about your mills, will prevent that. That is the epoch of which I speak. It is wonderful.

"I was much impressed by witnessing a class in gymnastics at a mill school in Gainesville. They were teaching the class folk dances to the accompaniment of music. That is splendid. Music is an expression of harmony. Dancing to it as these children were doing cannot but give grace to the growing generation.

"Another thing I saw there—it is one of the signs of this new epoch of which I speak—was in the village attached to the mill. One of the homes was that of the manager. Until it was pointed out to me I could not distinguish it from the others.

"Lives as Workmen Live."

"Then I saw that it was larger and in other ways finer. But in the main it was the same. 'There,' I said to myself, 'is a manager who is willing to live as his workmen live. He uses the same grounds, the same gardens that they use.'

"I cite it as one of the reasons I think highly of your country—of your south."

Erik Moller, of Denmark, smiled at being interviewed. "I have taken interviews all my life. I have a horror of giving one myself," he said. But he graciously yielded.

"Women in newspaper work in Denmark? Yes, indeed, we have them. We have women social editors just as you have, but I do not believe the work receives as much interest as it does here. The society pages write up large weddings and functions in much the same manner as you do here.

"And we have girl reporters, too. In fact, I do not think women in their work on newspapers differ much from what they do here."

George A. Finch, assistant secretary of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, which sponsored the visit of the European journalists, was deeply grateful to Atlanta and its people. He singled out Governor L. G. Hardman, Mayor I. N. Ragsdale, George A. Bland, Col. F. J. Paxon, Harry D. Wilson and Francis W. Clarke for personal expressions of appreciation, for courtesies shown the visitors.

Faculty Roster Announced For Fulton County Schools

System Has Experienced Its Most Successful Year, Superintendent Jere Wells Declares.

The faculty list for the 1930-31 session of Fulton county schools was announced Saturday by the county board of education. The list includes the faculty of the new North Fulton high school, of which Professor W. R. Dykes, now head of Fulton High school, will be the principal.

In a statement issued Saturday, Superintendent Jere A. Wells declared that the system has just experienced its most successful year. One hundred and sixty-five high school students graduated from Fulton and Russell High schools, and 900 seventh grade pupils finished the elementary department and will be eligible for high school in September.

"The large increase in high school attendance in recent years has made it necessary to erect an additional high school in the north end of the county to accommodate the students from that section as well as to relieve the crowded condition at Fulton High school," Mr. Wells said. "Russell High school in East Point will be the most overcrowded school in the county in September. There will be more than 1,000 students enrolled there, which will tax the school to its fullest capacity and probably make it necessary for some temporary rooms to accommodate the overflow."

Knox Walker, of Dublin, will succeed R. L. Ramsey as elementary supervisor. Mr. Ramsey will become principal of Fulton High school. Miss Kathleen Mitchell is primary supervisor. Maggie Perry is colored supervisor.

The list of teachers for the next session follows:

MISSISSIPPI SOLONS SET ENDURANCE MARK

Adjourn After Longest Session in History Without Revenue Measure.

JACKSON, Miss., May 31.—(AP)—The 1930 session of the Mississippi legislature adjourned tonight after setting a longevity record in which an $88,000,000 road building program was approved but no financing scheme for its inauguration adopted.

Another important matter unsettled at the end was appropriations for charity wards in private hospitals.

The senate ceased labors that began January 7, at 7 o'clock, with the house following 22 minutes later. According to legislative journals, it was 12 o'clock noon.

Eagerness of both branches to shift responsibility for inability to adopt a financing program for the road plan resulted in neither branch agreeing on issues submitted by the other.

As the matter ended, a program for a six cents gasoline tax, redistribution of the gas tax and leaving in the discretion of the new state highway commissioners to be elected June 24 the method of securing $5,000,000 to start the program was defeated in the house after the senate had approved this proposition with a 5-cent gas levy.

The measure reached the house from the senate early tonight and an amendment raising the gas tax from its present 5-cent limit to 6 cents was adopted, but on final passage the measure lacked the necessary three-fifths vote.

A last-minute effort of proponents of the 5-cent tax proposal to have that matter voted upon failed when the house overwhelmingly voted to adjourn sine die.

Almost crowded out, but squeezed through in almost the last minute of the session, was the house bill providing for issuance of more than $5,000,000 in state bonds to immediately liquidate outstanding bank guaranty certificates issued to depositors in failed state banks during operation of the bank guaranty of deposit law.

6 Ocean Liners Stage Private Naval Parade

NEW YORK, May 31.—(AP)—Like a troupe of elephants, trunk to tail, six ocean liners put out to sea today with 7,000 passengers bound for Europe.

Led by the California, which was first away from her pier, the Franconia, Lafayette, Fort George, Belgenland and Baltic made stately procession down the Hudson, giving watchers on shore such a naval display as they had not seen since the Atlantic fleet was here early this month.

Grover Whalen, specialist in parades, couldn't have arranged it better. Until recently all the big liners sailed on high tide at midnight. The growing hilarity of "sailing night," however, caused the lines to change the sailings to noon or thereabouts.

Traffic snarls ashore aided in sending the ships away together today. The Lafayette was held up half an hour while 79 or 80 missing passengers fought their way through a jam of taxicabs and trucks which blocked the streets near her pier. Ten traffic policemen finally got the traffic unsnarled but didn't find the eightieth missing passenger.

It was estimated 21,000 persons thronged the Chelsea piers before the sailing, 14,000 of them down to see the boats away.

Roosevelt Returns Healthy to Work

ALBANY, N. Y., May 31.—(AP)—Governor Roosevelt today returned to Albany, tanned and healthy after his month's vacation at Warm Springs, Ga. He paused here only seven minutes, then went on to Schenectady, where he addressed the state convention of the Knights of Columbus.

In his Schenectady address Roosevelt, saying that it was obvious that government, whether state or local, could not undertake more than a limited amount of welfare work, praised the welfare activities of the Knights of Columbus.

The state, he said, has definite functions in the care of the feeble-minded and insane, but hundreds of thousands requiring outside assistance are getting it from private organizations. He urged that such aid be continued.

Roosevelt leaves Sunday for Boston to attend the wedding of his oldest son, James, to Betty Cushing.

Rain-Soaked Motor Started by Lightning

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla., May 31.—(AP)—Benjamin Franklin's stunt with the kite was not as spectacular as the prank said to have been played by lightning at the home of County Commissioner Willard G. Smith at Pahokee yesterday.

During a heavy rainstorm A. Hanson, a dairyman of Pahokee, drove his truck into the commissioner's yard and started to get in out of the rain. But he ran back and turned his car around in an attempt to keep the rain from drowning out his motor. The motor wheezed its last, nevertheless, and Hanson, leaving the ignition on, gave it up and rushed to shelter once more.

A few minutes later, there was a crash of thunder and a flash of lightning. An automobile motor started running.

Hanson found his motor humming away after the storm and he drove away, astonished but pleased.

Masonic Club To Sponsor 'Toyland Revue' To Raise Milk Fund for Kiddies' Hospital

Little patients at the Scottish Rite Hospital for Crippled Children hear Mrs. T. Younger, the head nurse, tell what a lot of lovely sweet milk they are going to get after the Toyland Revue, sponsored by the Atlanta Masonic Club, is staged at Loew's Capitol theater for their benefit during the week of June 23. The youngsters listening so eagerly are, left to right, Clyde, Leary, Billy, Tom and Lawson.

At the Scottish Rite Hospital for Crippled Children devoted doctors and nurses are doing one of the greatest things for the advancement of human happiness the world has ever known. They are giving their time and effort, without stint and without hesitation, to making whole again those little ones who have begun life under the terrible handicap of physical disability.

It is a privilege for anyone to help in this glorious undertaking. It is a privilege that every Atlantan should welcome, when the opportunity comes.

That opportunity is coming—throughout the week of June 23, to be exact.

One thing is needed at the hospital—one thing more than any other. That is milk, to build up the bodies of the pitiful little ones who come there, pathetic in their helplessness, to get crooked limbs straightened, to find strength for undernourished bodies. Milk is the greatest strength-giving food for children that science knows. It is needed at the hospital, needed in unlimited quantity, in flowing streams of pure, sweet, health-giving abundance.

The Atlanta Masonic Club has sponsored a means to raise the money necessary for this unfailing supply of milk. They have arranged with Loew's Capitol theater to stage, during the week of June 23, a "Toyland Revue," with a hundred or more Atlanta children volunteering their services to appear on the stage in this presentation. During the week members of the Pi Pi Club, an organization of popular young Atlanta society girls, will stand in the lobbies and corridors of the theater, dressed as milkmaids and with milk pails in which they will ask every member of each audience to give, as much as they can, for the Masonic Club milk fund for the crippled children.

The Toyland Revue is to be staged and rehearsed by one of the most famous revue producers of Broadway. He is coming here especially for this event, contributing his services to the magnificent cause. Just who he is is not to be announced at this time, for fear something might interfere and delay his trip. The announcement of his name will be made as soon as possible and, when his identity is disclosed, it will, beyond doubt, surprise everyone in the city who knows anything about theatricals.

In the meantime the management of Loew's Capitol theater wants the children of Atlanta, the whole and healthy ones, to volunteer to help in this tremendous undertaking to provide milk for the unfortunate children at the hospital. Children up to the age of 14 can best help by volunteering to appear in the Toyland Revue, the outstanding feature of the stage show at the Capitol during the special week of June 23. It doesn't matter how young they are—so long as they can walk and talk and do something in the big revue. Therefore, from an unstinted minimum age up to 14 years old, boys and girls of Atlanta are invited to come into the big show. They'll have a splendid time and will enjoy a unique experience in being part of a big, professional stage show, drilled and produced by a famous Broadway theater man. And they'll also know they are giving their week to help along perhaps the most worthy cause of them all.

The theater can find room for 150 children in the show. They want lots of volunteers. So, today, there is printed at the end of this story an application coupon. If you are under 14 years of age and believe you can do anything at all on the stage—from acting as a model for child costumes or dancing in a chorus, up to solo singing and dancing—just fill in the coupon and mail it, right away, to the Toyland Revue manager, Loew's Grand theater, Atlanta.

Engineers Gather For Union Meeting

CLEVELAND, Ohio, May 31.—(AP) Two thousand railroaders from over North America were gathering here tonight for the sixth triennial convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers which will discuss principally effect of mergers and modern inventions upon the security of their jobs.

The convention opens Monday and continues for nearly a month. A membership of 80,000 from 917 divisions located as far south as the Rio Grande and as far north as Canada will be represented.

Officials of the brotherhood said they would express to the delegates their opposition to the railroad mergers that result in abandonment of lines and the consequent laying off of men and the breaking up of homes. They point to the fact that 40,000 firemen are out of work today.

Modern inventions which result in economies to the roads are going forward at such a rapid rate that the problem of unemployment has become acute. Officials will urge that there must be some adjustment either in the slowing down the progress of invention or in the adoption of the shorter working day.

They will discuss a basic working day of six hours and outline a program looking forward to its adoption.

40 Girl Industrial Workers To Take Course in Economics

SELECTED STUDENTS WILL GO TO NORTH CAROLINA SCHOOL

Between 35 and 40 selected girl industrial workers in the southeast are preparing to desert their trades and go to the western North Carolina mountains early in July, where they will learn the why and wherefore of social progress in industry.

Experts in the art of industrial economics have been engaged to conduct classes and conferences at the fourth annual term of the Southern Summer School for Women Workers in Industry, to be held at Arden, N. C., July 10 to August 22, Miss Mary C. Barker, chairman of the school's central committee, announced here Saturday.

The school is one of four of its kind in the United States. The others are at Bryn Mawr College, Barnard College and the University of Wisconsin. The southern school was organized in 1927 at Sweet Briar, Va., and the next two sessions held at Carolina New College, Burnsville, N. C. Removal to Christ School for Boys, at Arden, was made necessary by the suspension of the Burnsville school.

The committee controlling the school is composed of Miss Barker, chairman; Mrs. Dexter Otey, Lynchburg, Va.; Miss Rosa Holland, East Marion, N. C.; Miss Ontee Bell, San Antonio, Texas; Miss Alice Carmichael, Lynchburg; Miss Catherine Howard, High Point, N. C.; Dr. Lois MacDonald, Winnsboro, N. C.; Miss Nora McManus, Macon, Ga.; Dr. Broadus Mitchell, Baltimore and Miss Margaret Wall, Lynchburg.

Miss Barker said early prospects are bright for the 1930 session to eclipse all others in interest and size. While only 40 girls can be accommodated, these will be carefully chosen by 15 local workers' education committees existing in southern cities from Baltimore to Atlanta, and from Louisville, Ky., to Tampa, Fla.

Only women working in cotton mills, tobacco factories, rayon mills and other typical southern industries will be accepted. Requirements are that they shall be from 18 to 35 years old, with at least sixth grade schooling, and workers in industry for the last two years. Most of the students are over 21 years old, Miss Barker said.

The main course is economics, with classes in English composition, public speaking and health education grouped around it. The conference method of instruction is employed, with leaders in their respective fields heading the groups for discussion.

Stolen Jewelry Roundup Is Begun

NEW YORK, May 31.—(AP)—Detectives have been sent to several cities in the United States and Canada, police announced today, to search for additional stolen jewelry in the roundup of a gem theft ring, seven alleged members of which were arrested here this week.

Police refused to reveal the cities to which the search has been spread.

The arrest of six men and a woman here lead to the seizure of $1,300,000 worth of stolen jewels. Police still are holding $17,000 picked up from a packet of bills tossed out of a hotel window by a member of the gang during the raid in which the first five were arrested.

LOOTED ST. LOUIS BANK WEATHERS ALL-DAY RUN

Money Trucks From Federal Reserve Visit Institution Twice.

ST. LOUIS, May 31.—(AP)—The Grand National bank, looted of more than $1,000,000 in cash, securities and other valuables taken from safe deposit boxes a week ago, weathered a run today.

A long line of customers, fearing the institution would fail after disclosure yesterday that its part of the loss would approximate $400,000 filed through the bank all day withdrawing deposits. At times the line extended for more than a block down the street.

Twice money trucks arrived with additional cash from the Federal Reserve bank. One delivery, the bank announced, consisted of $400,000 lent for the emergency by the Chase National Bank of New York.

Late today President Ed Mays declared that the crisis had passed and that demands had been met and would continue to be met. He said the bank was solvent.

Continuing their investigation, police officials reiterated their opinion that the robbery was an "inside job." They were convinced that some one in the bank's employ was familiar with the robbers' plans before the looting, which took place last Sunday morning while the safe deposit vault, being dismantled for moving, was unguarded. Gifford J. Herbert, cashier, who has resigned, and William A. Brittin, custodian of the vault, who was discharged yesterday, are under $50,000 bonds pending investigation.

Yawn, of Lumberton, today was appointed treasurer of the state of Mississippi to succeed Webb Walley who resigned following his appointment to the state tax commission. Both appointments were made by Governor Bilbo. Senator Yawn will assume office June 15.

Among the associations choosing Atlanta for the 1931 conventions are the Eighteenth District Lions Clubs; the Georgia division, Disabled American Veterans of the World War; the National Alumni Secretaries Association; the Georgia Medical Association; the Grand Lodge of Georgia, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; the Georgia Osteopathic Association and the National Terrazzo and Mosaic Contractors' Association.

HEALTH BETTER NOW THAN IN 20 YEARS, SHE SAYS

Complications Readily Yielded to Powers of Sargon, Says Atlanta Woman.

"Sargon built me up from one hundred and ten pounds to one hundred and twenty-one, and I feel better than I have in twenty years," said Mrs. A. E. Howell, 150 Battlefield Ave., Atlanta, recently.

MRS. A. E. HOWELL.

"Gastric indigestion had given me trouble off and on for fifteen years; it became much worse during the past three years, and about four months ago I virtually had to give up eating. There was a heavy feeling in the top of my head, like a weight pressing me down. My nerves were on edge, I slept miserably and was generally weak and 'let-down.' My kidneys were over-active, my liver sluggish and I was habitually constipated. My health finally reached the point where it was decided I should go to a hospital for rest and treatment. This upset the entire family, and my husband said 'let's try Sargon first, it has helped so many people, maybe it will help you.'

"Right away I began taking this wonderful medicine, and my improvement was marvelous. I have a good appetite, and eat anything I want without any distress afterward. I have been so strengthened and my nervous system so built up that I'm not like the same woman. I sleep all night long, and have a new outlook on life.

"Sargon Pills regulated my liver, kidneys and bowels perfectly; and I never have those terrible headaches any more.

"I feel it my duty to tell what Sargon has done for me, and I expect to talk Sargon and Sargon Soft Mass Pills every opportunity I have."

The Sargon Man is at Jacobs' Main Store, 48 North Broad St., Grant Bldg., where he is meeting the public and explaining the merits of this celebrated new scientific product. Sargon may be obtained at all Jacobs' Drug Stores throughout Atlanta.—(adv.)

Woman Will Manage Poultry Show Affairs

Miss Bessie Bragassa, formerly of the Southeastern Fair Association, has been elected business representative of the Atlanta Winter Poultry show, which will be held in the Auditorium-Armory November 26, 27, 28 and 29.

MISS BESSIE BRAGASSA.

under auspices of various poultry organizations and the State College of Agriculture, it was announced Saturday following a meeting of the board of trustees of the show.

Miss Bragassa recently was connected with the Florida State Fair in Jacksonville as executive secretary, and with the Alabama State Fair in Birmingham.

Robert N. Springfield, president of the show, declared that in the opinion of the board of trustees, Miss Bragassa is thoroughly and admirably equipped to handle the business affairs of an educational exposition of this nature.

The board of trustees announced that the winter show will in nowise affect their support of the poultry shows held in connection with county and state fairs, but will come as a grand finale to the smaller shows and at a time when the fowls are in good feather and in best condition for exhibition. The purpose of the show is to encourage the poultry industry in the south and particularly in Georgia.

The State College of Agriculture has made public figures indicating that Georgia imported approximately $15,000,000 worth of poultry and eggs in 1929, although climatic conditions are said by experts to be almost ideal in this state for poultry farming.

Paul Whiteman Radio Orchestra Plays in Movie

The millions of radio listeners who for many months past have been charmed by the strains of the Paul Whiteman-Old Gold orchestra as they were broadcast from coast to coast over the stations of the Columbia network, will shortly see as well as hear the master musician as he conducts his great orchestra.

The medium through which the public will be enabled to see Whiteman as he directs his top-liner musical organization will be Universal's screen success, "King of Jazz," which features the Whiteman group of world famous instrumentalists.

Atlanta will have its initial glimpse of "King of Jazz" at Loew's Capitol theater this week. The production is said to be one of the most remarkable all-singing, all-talking and all-musical cinema extravaganzas yet turned out from the huge Hollywood studios. It is done wholly in technicolor and is said to be one of the most faithful sound portrayals ever brought to the silver sheet. It was made under the personal direction of John Murray Anderson, noted Broadway stage producer.

The picture required something more than a year to make and while it was being filmed, Whiteman and his orchestra made their headquarters in Los Angeles, making their regular Tuesday evening Old Gold broadcasts from a studio in the west coast city.

URBAN LEAGUE WEEKLY BULLETIN

BY JESSE O. THOMAS.

We are in the midst of commencement season with both public and private schools having their closing exercises during the present and following weeks. Gammon Theological seminary had its closing exercises on May 21 with 42 students receiving the bachelor of divinity degree, who were commissioned to join the ranks of spiritual leaders and respond to the injunction, "Go ye into all the world and preach my gospel." Five students received the seminary diploma, six the Bible Training school diploma and three the School of Missions diploma.

Morris Brown University closed with a remarkable year of hard work and unusual financial achievement as we think in terms of the depression incident to unemployment and financial distress. Without any endowment or financial relationship with the large foundations or any number of wealthy philanthropists, the school has come through the year, raising its current expenses largely from the membership of the A. M. E. Zion church in the state of Georgia. Some $28,000 was brought in by pastors and presiding elders and laid on the table during the commencement week, which will enable the administration to meet many of its present outstanding obligations. This type of sacrificial giving representing sustained effort, especially for the past two years, ought to challenge the support of the different foundations as well as the public-spirited individuals who have money to give to people who seemed so determined to help themselves.

Atlanta University will have its closing exercises Wednesday, June 4, at 10 a. m. with C. H. Tobias, senior secretary, National Council Y. M. C. A., colored men's department, delivering the commencement address. Approximately 29 young men and women will have the degree of bachelor of arts conferred upon them, while 10 are completing their normal work. This will mark the culmination of undergraduate work at this historical educational institution, which now becomes a graduate school.

The commencement exercises of Clark University will take place Tuesday morning, June 3. President J. B. Randolph, of Claflin University, will deliver the address to the 41 graduates from the college department and approximately 26 graduates from the normal department.

The Rev. Allan K. Chalmers, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Buffalo, N. Y., will deliver the commencement address to approximately 22 graduates from the college department of Spelman college Wednesday morning, June 4.

Approximately 60 degrees will be awarded to young men graduates of Morehouse college Tuesday afternoon, June 3, at which time the Rev. Allan K. Chalmers, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Buffalo, N. Y., will deliver the commencement address.

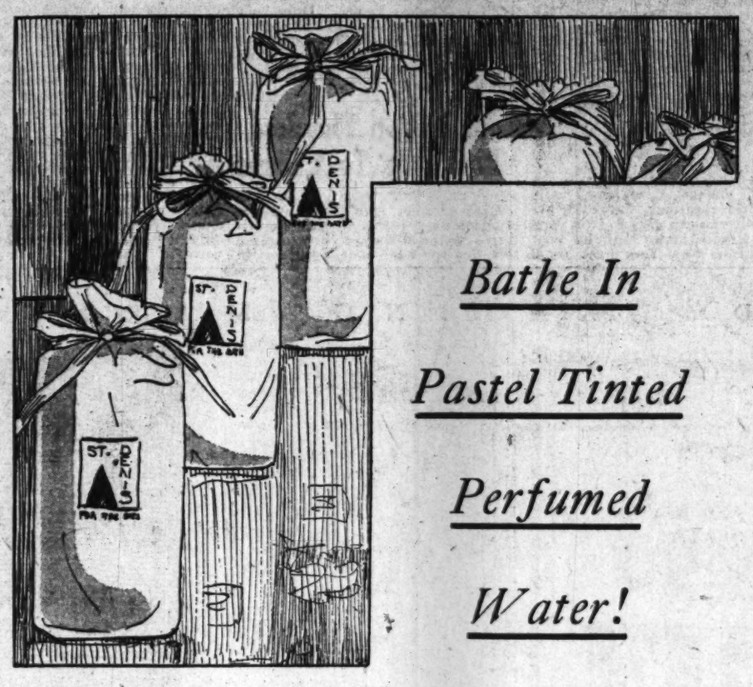

The public has been cordially invited to attend the commencement exercises of all the schools and colleges.

The Atlanta School of Social Work had its closing exercises at Sisters' chapel, Spelman college, Thursday evening, May 29, at which time the program was rendered with Dr. Edgar H. Johnson, chairman of the board of trustees, presiding.

It seems that the school was well founded, certainly from a numerical point of view. Coincidentally, these exercises marked the 10th anniversary of this institution. If its growth in the next 10 years is as substantial as it has been in the past decade and it accumulates as many co-founders, its usefulness will be more extensive and far-reaching.

Simmons' Defeat Foreseen In Carolina Party Primary

Contest Based On Single Issue of Simmons' Bolt to Hoover in 1928.

BY R. E. POWELL.

RALEIGH, N. C., May 31.—(Special.)—North Carolina democrats, thousands of them smarting under the loss of the state to Hoover in 1928, are preparing to march to the polling places in unprecedented numbers Saturday, June 7, and decide whether the gray-haired veteran and long-time political boss of the commonwealth, Furnifold M. Simmons, shall continue to be their choice for United States senator or whether they want to turn the toga over to the younger idol of party regulars—Josiah William Bailey.

The issue to be decided in the campaign which has five more days to run, drawn here more acutely than it has been anywhere in the south, is whether or not Senator Simmons, after having been in office for more than half his 76 years by democratic votes, is entitled to further honors in view of his desertion of the Smith-Robinson ticket nearly two years ago and his subsequent advice to democrats to vote for Hoover.

Bailey, perhaps the most brilliant lawyer in the Carolinas, with a prohibition record that began when he was the youthful but spirited editor of the leading Baptist weekly published in the state, collector of internal revenue under Woodrow Wilson and one of the Smith managers in the pre-convention fighting during 1928, is supported—financially and politically—by virtually every leader who in the past four decades has helped Simmons to dominate the party and keep his seat in the United States congress.

"Hybrid Support."

Simmons has what political observers call a hybrid organization—composed, in the main, of women who professed their opposition to Smith because of his prohibition views and of a few men with district reputations who have always followed the senior senator in his fights without regard to issues other than personal ones. The few better known ones have been long-time beneficiaries of small political favors extended them by Simmons or by governors who owed their nominations to the controlling wing of the party which he headed.

The situation in North Carolina, while similar to that to be settled in Alabama in August when Senator Heflin, running as an independent, bucks the party organization in that state, is different from the Virginia situation last fall. In the latter case, while one of the candidates was under fire for voting for the national nominees of the party in 1928, the anti-Smith opposition candidates to Governor Pollard was not an outstanding leader, nor did he have previous political experience.

Simmons' most pungent appeal to the oft-befuddled imaginations of the Tar Heel electorate has been that, in the so-called "dark days of negro domination," he lead the fight for white supremacy and restored the state government to the democrats in the late '90s. Many of these claims have been founded on nothing more substantial than myths but they have worked like a charm. The late Claude Kitchin, probably the most brilliant leader the state boasted since Zebulon B. Vance was its senator after the war, found the myth about Simmons and white supremacy so deeply rooted with old-time democrats that proof from senate democrats of 1912 showing Simmons to hold high protective tariff views—plus a vote for Lorimer—didn't win any votes for his brother, the then Governor W. W. Kitchin.

Held to One Issue.

Bailey has, with a cleverness that has amazed, and even mystified, the astute campaign committee managing his fight, held the battle to the one issue: Is Simmons, the bolter of 1928, to be trusted in a fight with the republicans in 1930? All efforts to draw him out on his previously expressed views about prohibition, state taxation and less important matters have been disappointing failures to the Simmons management. He has steadfastly said that he is running as a democrat and his appeal has been to those who want to see the state government continue in the hands of the democrats and its congressional representatives to be of the same faith.

The closing days of the campaign have been marked by bitterness, arising largely over charges dealing with the alleged registration here in the city of Raleigh of some 600 negroes. Bert M. Gatling, Raleigh postmaster under Wilson—and who, by the way, owed his appointment more to Bailey than to any other single influence—charges that the faction headed by William B. Jones, Smith's preconvention manager in 1928, now supporting Bailey, brought about the registration of the negroes as democrats. Gatling and Simmons have both charged that all southern negroes are republicans and should be barred from the primaries. Josephus Daniels, editor of the Raleigh News and Observer and war-time secretary of the Navy, has called on election officials to purge the lists of the negroes.

Mr. Jones, who denies that the negroes have been registered so that they may vote for Bailey, says that in one Raleigh ward negroes have always voted in municipal and November elections and that there is no more increase this year than that relatively recorded among the whites. The registration in some counties has been new and all over the state has been abnormally heavy. Both sides claim that this is an advantage to their candidate.

Gift From McAdoo.

One of the incidents of the campaign in its closing days has been the revelation of a contribution of $1,000 to Simmons by William Gibbs McAdoo, a lift which the Baileyites say will hurt Simmons more than it will help. Bailey's contributions have been from many who formerly opposed him politically. Former Governor Cameron Morrison, whose relations with the Raleigh candidate were so strained at one time that the two refused to speak, topped the list of Bailey contributions with a gift of $2,000. Both sides have reported the receipt and disbursement of a little more than $7,000 each. Former Governor McLean, who served as an assistant secretary of the treasury under Wilson, and who announced at the beginning of the campaign that he would support Simmons for renomination, although considered comparatively wealthy, was not reported as among the Simmons' war chest donors.

Indications are rather striking that the Bailey forces have in most of the counties of the state manned the election machinery, a factor which opponents of Simmons, in his previous campaigns, have always counted as a handicap of 50,000 to 75,000 votes in primaries where the total participation ranged from 200,000 to 250,000.

Under the election law which the North Carolina general assembly passed after the 1928 general election, Simmons, entering the June 7 primary for what he described as his "last fight," is prohibited from running as an independent in case he loses the nomination. Most impartial observers agree that, barring a political miracle, he is certain to be defeated. His campaign strategy, they say, has been the weakest he ever displayed while Bailey's managers, profiting from long association with the senator's tactics, are turning his own brand of fighting against him with devastating effect.

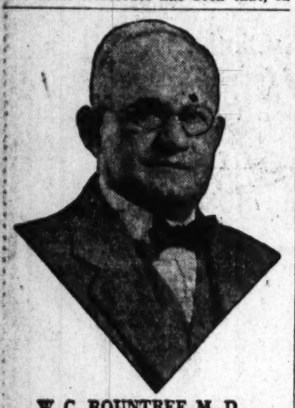

Republican Fight.

For the first time in the history of the party, the republicans are having a three-cornered primary fight for the senatorial nomination. Heretofore they have selected their nominees in state conventions but the opinion prevalent two months ago, somewhat dissipated now, that whichever side lost June 7 would carry the right on to November and vote for the republican candidate, caused them to begin a real scramble for the nomination.

The republican candidates are former United States Attorney Irvin B. Tucker, generally believed to have a long lead; Major George E. Butler, brother of former United States Senator Marion Butler, and George Pritchard, son of another former senator.

The few democrats who believe Simmons will be renominated are not apprehensive about any wholesale bolting and the same is true of those who look for Bailey to win next Saturday. The fact that democrats in both camps want the state government to continue in the hands of the democrats takes the edge off any formidable punitive expeditions in the fall.

Although quiet but peppy all the way through, the outlook today is for Bailey to be nominated by a margin of some 50,000 votes and for him to easily obtain the same majority over the successful republican nominee in the November election.

HE SUFFERED FOR YEARS WITH PILES

Some Doctors Said Ulcers; Others Abscesses and Others Piles.

A SIMPLE LITTLE REMEDY CURED IT

"After you have suffered as I did for three years and spend all I did in vain, you surely feel grateful when something comes along and heals you up and makes you well, and happy, at my age, 79 years," writes C. F. C. Stamp, who like scores of people here, praises Colac Pile Pills to the sky.

"Some doctors called it abscess, others ulcers and some just piles, but I was in terrible pain with almost a steady flow of bloody fume, or sometimes it was clear red blood. Our family physician, and a couple more did their best for me, and I had already used the remedies advertised in the papers so you can imagine my relief when I found Colac Pile Pills were each day lessening the pain, and bloody flow. It got less and less until it quit, and the bowels moved regular, and comfortable again. They surely healed me up, and made me well and happy," continued Mr. Stamp, a well-known farmer of Preston, Iowa.

Seven out of ten past forty years of age are apt to suffer with some mild or serious rectal trouble. Colac Pile Pills—a couple with a swallow of water at meal times, do good to countless thousands. They are sold on positive guarantee of results or money back by leading druggists or send 75c cash or stamps to Colac Chemical Co., Brentwood, Md., for full size bottle return mail.—(adv.)

Constitution Thanked For Help To Census

Expression of appreciation of the co-operation rendered by The Constitution in the taking of the census in this district was made Saturday in a letter from Dr. Elizabeth Broach.

Dr. Broach's letter is as follows:

"Nearing the close of taking the fifteenth decennial census in the fourth district of Georgia, I want to thank you for your splendid co-operation.

"The comprehensive enumeration being turned in to the bureau at Washington by my force, owes no small part of its success to the educational campaign which your paper so freely and enthusiastically waged.

"In this scientific age, vast sums are spent in conducting experiments, constructing and supporting laboratories, observatories, medical schools, universities and research foundations. The staggering strides of American production and manufactory and distribution, and every line of human progress, must have statistics. Facts talk. As your fourth Georgia district supervisor of the fifteenth decennial census, I am deeply grateful to you for the magnanimous gift of space and influence you have contributed through your paper to make this the best census in the history of Atlanta and the fourth district.

"Let me mention in special appreciation, the pleasing professional conduct of your reporter whose tiresome duty it was to handle daily census notes."

It is new, modern and revolutionary in performance—tried, proved and accepted in principle—durable in construction and economical in operation. For any sized home—not merely palatial mansions but for your home large or small—it is the permanent solution of the comfort problem.

This simple, compact and efficient system obsoletes conventional heating methods—gives your home a degree of healthful comfort never before available. Satisfaction is guaranteed by written bond. Each Holland is custom-built for the home it serves. Engineers plan and supervise installation. One organization assumes full responsibility.

Bogus Bulb Salesman Sought by Magazine

A slick-tongued salesman, described as a young man, has been selling three for a nickel gladiolus bulbs in south Georgia, around Americus, as a new blooming sprout developed by the magazine Better Homes and Gardens.

The publishers of Better Homes and Gardens, the Meredith Publishing Company, of Des Moines, Iowa, are anxious to have the smooth-talking young man apprehended and convicted.

He represents his gladiolus bulbs, which may be purchased in most any five-and-ten store, as "Colchicum sprouts," explaining that the bulbs would develop beautiful and fragrant blossoms if placed on a table or window sill without the aid of water or soil. Stern, hard-boiled south Georgia businessmen, as well as credulous flower-loving women, paid the fake salesman $1 for four bulbs, or 35 cents apiece.

The magazine became interested when it was reported to them that the young man exhibited, during his sales talk, a leaf from Better Homes and Gardens with a typewritten sheet over it stating that "Colchicum" was sponsored by the publishing firm.

BANDIT RAIDS IN CHINA ENDANGER AMERICANS

Standard Oil Executive Kidnaped; No Priests in Beleagured City.

SHANGHAI, May 31.—(AP)—The nationalist government, hard pressed by the rebellious northern alliance troops in Honan province, is being harassed elsewhere by bandit and communistic armies, ravaging several provinces.

An ominous silence was imposed today on communications from the battle front in Honan, where the rebels have been fighting the government forces since May 8 in an attempt to overthrow the Nanking government and its president, Chaing Kai-Shek. The tide of battle apparently turned Wednesday when the northerners claimed they captured 50,000 nationalists and forced the government troops to retreat. Rumors that Chiang Kai-Shek had been wounded in the arm while leading the nationalists were officially denied today by Nanking.

Taking advantage of the government's preoccupation with rebel forces in Honan, communists pressed their attack upon the city of Changchow, 30 miles west of Amoy in Fukien province. Terrorized, thousands of the populace fled toward Amoy on the coast. A number of foreign missionaries were prepared to follow momentarily.

All nationalist officials of the city quit their posts and a portion of the government troops of the garrison joined the red attackers. The Standard Oil Company's Chinese agent at Changchow is reported to have been kidnaped, the reds demanding $15,000 Mexican ($7,500) ransom.

Meanwhile, the siege of Kangchow, Kiangsi province, by bandit-communistic troops continues. Since early in March more than a score of foreign missionaries, 16 of them American Catholics, have been held in the city by the outlaws beseiging the city's walls.

Other forces of bandits and communists, overrunning the countryside near Shasi, Hupeh province, have caused the British authorities to send a gunboat to take away British residents of the city. Near Shasi 1,500 marauders attacked an American steamer on the Yangtse river and wounded three Chinese members of the crew. Bullets battered the steamer badly before it escaped.

In numerous other provinces, the bandit armies are continuing their depredations.

POLING TO SPEAK AT YOUTH RALLY

day deliver the commencement sermon. The program itself will be opened with an organ prelude by Dr. Sheldon, followed by the rendition of the Doxology by the audience. Willis A. Sutton, superintendent of city schools, will deliver the invocation, following which the song service, consisting of "Onward, Christian Soldiers," "True-Hearted, Whole-Hearted," "Faith Is the Victory" and "Faith of Our Fathers."

The benediction will be pronounced by Dr. L. R. Christie, pastor of the Ponce de Leon Avenue Baptist church.

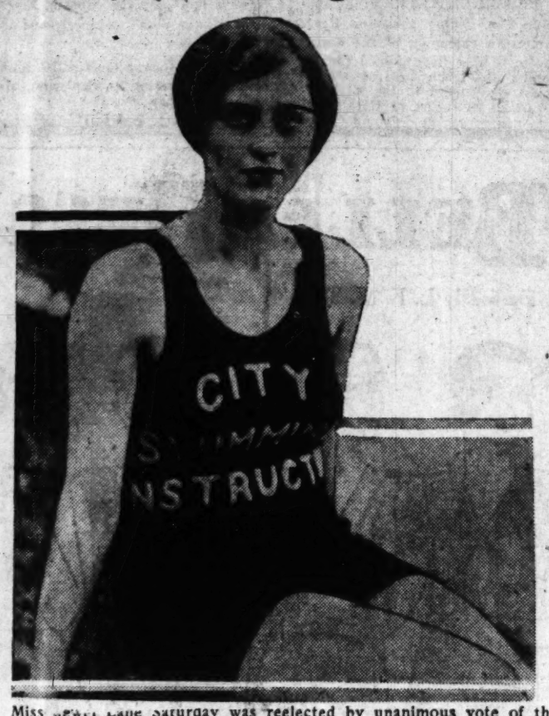

Chief among the organizations which are sponsoring the rally today are the Evangelical Ministers' Association, the Christian Council, Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A., Atlanta Baptist Sunday School Association, Emory University, Georgia School of Technology, Columbia Theological seminary, Agnes Scott college, the Atlanta Guild of Organists and the public schools of the city.

On the stage of the auditorium will be seated a large number of Atlanta ministers, educators and other civic personages. Thomas C. Dickson, chairman of the promotion committee for the rally, requests that everyone be in their seat before the hour at which the gathering is called to order, so that the program may get under way without delay.

The committee has worked ceaselessly to make today's initial youth rally a signal success, Mr. Dickson said, and all indications point to the consummation of its plan. Associated with him on the committee are the following members who will be present at this afternoon's meeting:

Miss Jewel Lane Is Retained As City Swimming Instructor

Miss Jewel Lane Saturday was reelected by unanimous vote of the parks committee for the third consecutive year to teach young Atlanta the art of swimming in the municipal pools. She will begin her duties as soon as the pools open Saturday afternoon, June 7.

Coincident with announcement Saturday of the retention of Miss Jewel Lane as swimming instructor for the Atlanta parks department, John A. White, councilman from the fourth ward and chairman of the parks committee of council, declared that the formal opening of the White golf course in the Cascade section of West End has been set for 2 o'clock on the afternoon of June 28.

Five swimming pools will be operated this year for white persons and one for negroes. They will be formally opened at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon, June 7, and music will be furnished by the municipal band under the direction of John Scharf.

More than 500,000 persons are expected to visit the municipal swimming pools this year, according to Mr. White, and every restriction possible has been taken from the bathers giving them free reign with their "consicences as their only guide."

Mr. White issued a warning to parents, however, concerning attempts of youngsters to use the deep pools until they have learned to swim.

"We are furnishing a swimming instructor who is regarded as one of the most proficient in Atlanta to help all those who can not swim," Mr. White said. "Miss Lane has been with the system for two years.

"There will be life guards and every precaution possible will be thrown about those who use the swimming pools. We need the co-operation of the parents of Atlanta in addition and feel sure that we will get it.

"Pools will open daily at 5:30 o'clock in the morning and close at 10:30 o'clock, except Sunday morning, when they will close at 8 o'clock in the mornings. They will be reopened at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoons and close at 9:30 o'clock at night.

"Bathers may wear any kind of suit purchasable. They may wear the bathing suits from their homes to the pools, but must enter through the gates so that a check-up can be kept on the number visiting the pools. They also may make purchases from concession stands while clad in their bathing suits."

The White golf course is one of the best nine-hole courses in this section of the country, according to Stiles & Van Kleek, architects.

The parks committee Saturday unanimously chose T. J. Modie, of Atlanta, as the professional at the course, and an effort will be made to have Bobby Jones christen the course with a foursome if he is back in Atlanta in time for the opening, it was said.

Mr. Modie is one of Atlanta's closest students of golf and came to the committee highly recommended.

BOBBY COMPLETES DIADEM OF GOLF

pion is an honorary member of the Royal and Ancient.

Bobby told again of his love for "old St. Andrews," in accepting the trophy.

"I never have been happier to get any cup," he said, adding, "and I never worked so hard, nor suffered so much either."

Jones' relentless battle against par proved too much for his slender opponent. The fact that Wethered was playing his ball seemed incidental. Bobby was trying constantly to better or at least remain level with par and in this he was highly successful.

NEVER OVER PAR.

In the morning round he never went above the figures called perfect for each hole. He had one five on his card—at the long seventh—where Wethered got a fine birdie four, but Jones had birdies at the 5th and 14th and with all the others in even par he was two under for the morning round.

In the afternoon he went over par on two of the first four holes, but after that he never slipped, and birdies at the 23d and 28th holes offset these. So in his battle against par he had a two-stroke advantage for the day.

Turning at the ninth—the 27th of the match—for the last time Bobby shot 3-3-4—and it was all over. With a four-hole advantage at the intermission he had added one hole on the first nine of the afternoon and was five up. He made it sixth with a birdie three at the 312-yard 28th, where he almost drove the green. His par three at the short 29th was good enough for a half, and a par four at the 30th brought him the title when Wethered missed a putt for the half, which could only have served to postpone the decision.

AIR VIEWS AT CANDLER FIELD

Gene Hinton

As this is being written, the Prudden-Whitehead No. 2, product of the Atlanta Aircraft Corporation's factory at Candler Field, is "rolling down to Rio," far out on the bosom of the broad Atlantic on the liner "Southern Cross." Its tests satisfactory to inspectors of the department of commerce at New York and the approved type certificate granted, the big low-wing monoplane was dismantled, crated and stored in the steamer, which sailed from New York Friday night. Accompanying the plane, which will make an extended flight in South America to practically every part of that country, are Eddie Hamilton, veteran tri-motor pilot; Edward Whitehead, vice president of the company; Charles d'Andussey, manager of the company's foreign department, and H. Anderson, mechanic. George H. Prudden, designer of the plane and vice president of the company, accompanied the ship to New York, observed the final tests, superintended the disassembling operations and then came back to Atlanta by train, thoroughly pleased at the plane's showing and its prospects in the commercial field.

Doug Davis, southern manager for the Curtiss-Wright Sales Corporation, flying a J-5 Travel Air Speedwing; and Art Brown, Davis Airlines pilot, flying a four-place Robin, also the property of the sales corporation, left Candler Field Saturday afternoon for Tennessee's Sky Harbor, Murfreesboro, Tenn., where today they will participate in an air carnival being sponsored by the 105th Observation Squadron, Tennessee National Guard. The Speedwing Davis is flying is the craft in which Mrs. Louise Thaden, Pittsburgh aviatrix, won the woman's derby from Santa Monica, Cal., to Cleveland last summer. In addition to the local fliers and members of the 105th, Jimmy Haizlip will be on hand with the Shell Petroleum Company's Travel Air "Mystery S"; two army aviators from Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio; six navy ships from the Pensacola base and an army dirigible, weather permitting. Officials of Interstate Airplines, Inc., are anticipating that the largest crowd in their airport's history will be on hand for the schedule of races and stunts to be offered.

Scattering 20,000 circulars over a large portion of central Georgia, Beeler Blevins, of the Blevins Aircraft corporation, Saturday completed a 280-mile swing around the circuit in about two hours and 45 minutes in his company's Lycoming-powered Stinson Junior. He was accompanied by O. V. Holcomb, president of the Holcomb Oil company, who did the actual tossing. The following Georgia towns were given the opportunity of reading about the merits of the Atlanta lubricant: Fairburn, LaGrange, Hogansville, Warm Springs, Mansfield, Thomaston, Barnesville, Jackson, Griffin, Porterdale, Covington, Conyers, Lithonia and Decatur.

F. W. Whitmore, in charge of the accounting department of Eastern Air Transport, Inc., at New York, visited the completed Atlanta base for the first time last week and was greatly impressed with the development of the branch. He was flown to Richmond in a Mailwing by H. A. Elliott, operations manager of the company, and at the Virginia field hopped aboard a Ford tri-motor which Fermon Stone was preparing to fly back to Atlanta after having carried some officials of the company to Asheville, N. C. Mr. Whitmore departed Saturday by motor car for Richmond, where he again will board a plane and fly into New York. He doped it out that his entire transportation expenses, New York to Atlanta and return, would require a total outlay of 55 cents.

Captain Arthur Page, who Saturday bested 23 navy pilots to annex the Curtiss marine trophy and establish a new record for the event of 164.08 miles an hour, is well known in Atlanta, the famed flier having put the first Prudden-Whitehead through its initial test flights here. In Saturday's race, Page was piloting a Curtiss Marine Hawk, the only water-cooled craft in the event, and the same ship, with some added steamlining, in which Major C. A. Lutz swept to victory in 1928 with an average speed of about 157.5 miles an hour. Last year the event was won and the former race record established by Lieutenant W. G. Tomlinson, who averaged 162 miles an hour in a plane equipped with a special motor cowling which was barred in Saturday's race.

The action of the department of commerce in requiring airline operators to obtain certificates of authority after May 15, is another step toward better regulation of air transportation, according to Frederick G. Coburn, president of the Aviation Corporation and its transportation subsidiary, American Airways, Inc. "The regulations will require all airlines to meet certain standards of safety, efficiency and suitability of equipment and personnel before being granted sanction by the department to continue operations, in the case of existing lines ,or to start operations in the case of new ones," Coburn said. "All forward-looking operators should be thankful to the department for this helpful measure."

Under the new regulations, airline operators in interstate commerce are given until July 15 to file application with the department of commerce for a certificate of authority to operate, upon which they will be issued temporary letters of authority pending inspection of the various lines by department representatives. Among the provisions of the new regulations are: "Aircraft shall be provided with suitable instruments and equipment and shall be properly adaptable to the nature of the service involved. An adequate number of qualified airmen shall be employed who shall be fully competent in all phases of the particular operations, including the use of equipment, devices, accessories and other aids incident to the operation for which the certificate is issued. The secretary of commerce may, at his discretion, require that crews of the aircraft employed shall include such qualified personnel, other than pilots in command, as may be necessary safely to carry out the particular operation."

DORAN BLAMES DRY FAILURE ON PUBLIC

the New England states and in Pennsylvania, which he said varied in different sections. He said the dry laws were the result of increased speed in production.

"As the lives of the citizens of each state expanded under increased benefits of industrial prosperity," Doran said, "the laws controlling liquor became more stringent.

"The eighteenth amendment had its origin in a discovery by the people of the necessity for the control and abolition of the liquor traffic."

Doran said that for a year after the national dry law went into effect there was no marked disposition to violate it.

"Slowly some non-law-abiding citizens made furtive attempts to violate it," he continued, "and found that it could be violated with apparent immunity."

This, the commissioner said, was due to lack of preparedness on the part of the government to take over such a huge task as enforcing the law and failure of state officials to grasp the opportunity "opened to them under the concurrent power clause of the eighteenth amendment."

"It goes without saying," he said, "that if the state forces had proceeded promptly to exert the power the eighteenth amendment gave them, the country would not today be facing the situation it does regarding prohibition law enforcement."

"There are now on the statute books of 43 states adequate laws, which, taken in conjunction with the national prohibition act, and adequately enforced by the present peace officers of the cities, counties and the states themselves, can accomplish enforcement of the prohibition laws."

Doran said in conclusion: "It has been shown that, where close co-operation between city, county and state officials with the federal officers exists there is good enforcement. Where co-operation does not exist for any reason whatever, enforcement is not so good. The burden put upon the federal enforcement machinery is too heavy.

"In the five states—New York, Maryland, Montana, Wisconsin and Nevada—that have no enforcement code, it has been proven that the state officials can fall back on the concurrent power given them by the eighteenth amendment to enforce the national prohibition law if they wish to do so."

The monograph was the third of a series issued in the prohibition bureau's educational campaign for which congress appropriated $50,000.

Engdahl Assails Ban on Communists

Charging that "if it is admitted that the local prosecutor speaks for the state," Georgia stands alone in the nation in an attempt to outlaw communist activity, J. Louis Engdahl, general secretary of the International Labor Defense, issued a statement Saturday declaring that his organization "will struggle against this announced effort to spread the blighting pall of new czarism over Georgia."

Six alleged communists are held in Fulton tower charged with distributing insurrectionary literature and with attempting to incite an insurrection. They are Mary Dalton and Ann Burlak, white women; Joe Carr and M. H. Powers, white men; Wilmer Brady and Henry Storey, negroes, all communist organizers.

Three Convicted.

LONDON, Tenn., May 31.—(AP)—A jury today convicted Buck Williams, Lee Snider and Lester Williams of the murder of Roy Schrimpshire here March 28 and fixed their punishment at 20 years each in the state penitentiary.

Page Sweeps Alone Against 23 Navy Pilots To Set New Record of 164.08 M. P. H.

WASHINGTON, May 31.—(AP)—Carrying the colors of the marines alone against 23 navy pilots, Captain Arthur Page today swept to a new race record of 164.08 miles an hour and won the Curtiss marine trophy.

Lieutenant D. W. Harrigan won the Ingalls trophy for the highest percentage of rated speed by leading a group of training ships with a speed of 102.02 miles an hour.

Lieutenant J. H. Dyer, winning the observation plane race with a speed of 145.81 miles an hour, roared across the finish line third, beating out three fighter pilots whose ships were rated faster. He pressed Lieutenant A. P. Storrs, combat flyer, who finished next to Page.

Lieutenant P. D. Stroop was the sole torpedo plane pilot to finish, averaging 118.72 miles an hour. Three contenders in the class were forced out, and only quick work by Lieutenant J. E. Beck saved his plane when it caught on fire from engine overheating.

Lieutenant T. D. Guinn piloted the winning amphibian, averaging 117.84 miles an hour. Four pilots were forced to land after the third lap and two were disqualified after the first turn for cutting a pylon too short.

Captain Page used the same plane in which Major C. A. Lutz, the only other marine to win the trophy in 11 years of competition, sped to victory in 1928.

The ship had been restramlined and, skimming low over the Potomac to take advantage of a heavier cushion of air and turning short on the pylons, Page was able to add 6.5 miles an hour to Lutz's speed.

The former race record was established last year by Lieutenant W. G. Tomlinson, who averaged 162 miles an hour in a ship with a special cowl which was outlawed in today's race.

More than 10,000 spectators viewed the race and a spectacular background of flying demonstrations, in which Lieutenant T. G. W. Settle dropped in a glider from the Los Angeles, and Lieutenant Commander C. A. Nicholson hooked a plane to the dirigible.

Settle's glider flight was his first from a dirigible and the second in the history of world aeronautics. Nicholson had executed his feat twice before, but, baffled by heavy winds, was unable to make contact until his fifth attempt.

Lieutenant M. B. Gardner, rated by the navy as its foremost stunt pilot, for the first time demonstrated to the public the "inverted falling leaf," which Lieutenant Alford J. Williams demonstrated shortly before resigning from the service.

Glenn Curtiss, who yesterday celebrated the twentieth anniversary of his pioneer flight from Albany to New York, presented the trophy to Captain Page, while David S. Ingalls, assistant secretary of navy for aeronautics, made the award of his trophy to Lieutenant Harrigan.

Elinor Smith, 19-year-old aviatrix and holder of the endurance record for women, broadcast the seaplane classic over a nationwide radio network.

Salvation Army Asks More Paper and Rags

Decline in prices obtainable for old paper and rags has put the Salvation Army social service center $2,000 in debt during the first eight months of its fiscal year, it was reported Saturday by Ensign Hugo Bloomberg, officer in charge. The report included the month of May, which ended Saturday.

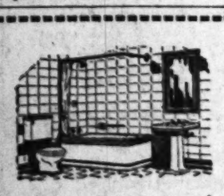

The center maintains the Army's religious and welfare work among men who are "down but not out" solely from the sale of old paper, rags, clothing and furniture collected from Atlanta homes, the officer stated. It does not participate in the Salvation Army appropriation from the Community Chest, which is used for the relief department, assisting cases of family distress in which women and children are involved. It does not accept any direct cash contributions.

At prices now obtainable, the deficit can be wiped out during the four months remaining before October 1, the end of the center's fiscal year, by an increase in collections of 135,000 pounds of rags or 500,000 pounds of old papers, Ensign Bloomberg stated.

Johnny Hines Denies Driving Intoxicated

LOS ANGELES, May 31.—(AP)—Johnny Hines, film comedian, will face a jury trial June 25 in municipal court on charges of being drunk in an automobile. He pleaded not guilty today.

The actor, said his attorney, Henry M. Willis, will blame cream puffs in his defense. Hines was arrested Thursday with a woman companion who, police said, fell down as she left his car. Hines offered the explanation that they had eaten cream puffs at a party which disagreed with them, and that their illness was interpreted as liquor intoxication.

Woman Re-Wed, Shocked To Find 'Husband' in Jail

TORONTO, May 31.—(AP)—A dispatch to The Toronto Star from Owen Sound says that a plea for pardon, filed with the Nebraska pardon board at Lincoln by Lafayette (Harry) Dales has revealed after the wife whom he left many years ago has remarried in the belief her husband was dead.

He abandoned his wife, Eliza, and their three young children in 1903, and in 1913 she married Henry Rourick, with whom she lives now at Owen Sound.

"My children are grown up now, but they and my wife want me and I want to go back to them," Dales wrote to the pardon board.

But Mrs. Rourick says, "Harry Dales died 27 years ago. His clothes and a tintype photograph were laid on my doorstep one night and I have not heard anything of him since then. Ten years later I married again. No, no, it must not be opened again. Harry Dales is dead."

The holiday services, generally held in conjunction with the confirmation exercises for students of the Jewish Bible classes, will be observed with appropriate ceremonies at the Hebrew Benevolent temple, the Shearith Israel synagogue and the Ahavath Achim synagogue.

Senate Confirmation Of MacNider Expected

WASHINGTON, May 31.—(AP)—The way seems clear for confirmation of Hanford MacNider, of Iowa, as minister to Canada, but the senate foreign relations committee is withholding action to hear from Senator Brookhart, republican, Iowa.

Senator Brookhart and Mr. MacNider have been political foes, although both are republicans. It is admitted that if the senator voices a personal objection a serious contest would be in prospect.

Brookhart has been in the south ever since President Hoover sent the nomination to the senate, and his office has no word of his attitude toward the appointment. He is expected to return this week.

Typographical Union Votes for Incumbents

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., May 31.—(AP)—Tellers compiling an unofficial count in the referendum election of new officers of the International Typographical Union announced tonight that 373 local units out of a total of approximately 785 voting, have given Charles P. Howard, Indianapolis, the incumbent, 22,529 votes for the presidency. The official count will not be begun until June 7.

The other two presidential candidates ran far behind: Fred Barker, Spokane, Wash., polled 8,879, and R. G. Soderstrom, Streator, Ill., 8,410.

The unofficial tabulation is expected to be completed Monday. The count thus far includes the two largest unions—New York and Chicago.

Charlotte Becomes Queen of Carolina

Two weeks ago Charlotte's 1930 population was given as 82,645. Tonight Winston-Salem came forth with her figure of 75,272.

Ten years ago Winston's 48,395 people led the state, Charlotte running second. Winston's percentage of growth was 56, Charlotte's 79.

NORTHERN BAPTISTS PICK KANSAS CITY

Committee Condemns Liquor Interests as Misleading.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, May 31.—(AP) Northern Baptists, with Dr. Albert W. Beaven, of Rochester, N. Y., as their newly elected president, will hold their 1931 convention at Kansas City, Mo., in territory dominated by Southern Baptists, it was decided today at the convention here.

The vote for Kansas City was unanimous, as was the vote for Dr. Beaven, who is president of the Colgate-Rochester Divinity school.

The Baptists also entertained a motion of the resolutions committee, recommending federal supervision of the motion picture industry. The committee said some pictures are demoralizing to children, and that some of the practices of the industry interfere with cordial foreign relations.

The resolutions committee condemned the liquor interests for misleading the public through what the committee termed the wet press; gave its approval to transfer of liquor enforcement from the treasury department to the department of justice, and commended Canada's stand in refusing to license exportation of liquor to dry countries.

Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt addressed the convention tonight, adhering to her policy of refraining from discussing the prohibition question which she adopted after leaving the office of assistant United States attorney general.

Atlantans Favor Repeal in Digest Prohibition Poll

The wet and dry sentiment of principal Georgia cities, as revealed in the Literary Digest's national prohibition poll, was reflected in a tabulation of final returns from cities of 5,000 or more population, just made public by the magazine publishers.

Atlanta's returns indicate a preference for repeal of the eighteenth amendment, with this classification exceeding those favoring enforcement of prohibition by 1,045 votes, or more than half of the total for enforcement. Those favoring modification of the amendment outnumber the enforcement group also by a large percentage.

Twenty-six cities of Georgia are included in the tabulation, which follows:

GEORGIA	Enf.	Mod.	Rep.	Total
Albany	158	111	113	382
Americus	38	65	39	142
Athens	211	160	113	484

3,356,000,000 Fares On New York Cars

NEW YORK, May 31.—(AP)—The transit commission today reported that the subways, elevated trains, surface cars and busses in New York city carried 3,356,000,000 passengers in the year ended December 31, 1929. This was a gain of 91,000,000 over the previous year.

The record showed that 93,793,560 fares had been collected at the Interborough and B. M. T. booths at Times Square during the year, compared with 91,020,076 in 1928.

The report said Times Square is still the busiest point in the city's rapid transit system, estimating that 187,587,120 persons passed through the turnstiles there.

Indiana Discovers Gambling at Races

JEFFERSONVILLE, Ind., May 31. (AP)—An investigation into the operation of the Falls Cities Kennel Club "Dot Mart" race track, near here, started Thursday by assistants of James M. Ogden, attorney-general of Indiana, was concluded today and investigators said their visit showed "gambling was rampant at the track among all who attended, both young and old."

Walter E. Prentice, Clark county prosecutor, said that in all probability a movement will be started to close the track.

Officials of the track have gone through several legal tilts in the attempt to operate the $80,000 plant, and now are running under a system whereby dogs are auctioned in connection with the races.

Albania Population Placed at 833,000

TIRANA, Albania, May 31.—(AP)—A recent national census, announced today, put the population of Albania at 833,000. Census officials believe that the correct figure is much nearer one million, but as many superstitious Albanians hid in caves and mountain fastnesses to evade enumeration, the smaller figure stands.

French Complete First Phase of Evacuation

LANDAU, Germany, May 31.—(AP) The French army of occupation in the third Rhineland zone has punctually completed the first of the three phases of evacuation that by June 30 will have taken the last "poilu" out of German soil.

Zwiebruecken, Germersheim, Speyer, Ludwigshafen, Worms and Bingen have been abandoned according to the schedule announced by the French high command recently. The reduction in the garrisons at Neustadt, Mayence, Treves and Landau has been carried out.

The next phase will be the practically complete evacuation of Mayence, Treves, Landau and Kehl by June 17, after which only scattered detachments of French will remain in the Rhineland until the withdrawal has been completed.

Champion Schooner Destroyed by Fire

PROVINCETOWN, Mass., May 31. (AP)—The fishing schooner Progress, American champion of the north Atlantic fishing fleet, joined the list of racing fishermen lost at sea today when she burned to the water's edge 50 miles southeast of Highland light. Her crew of 23 men was picked up by the freighter Iowan and later brought here by coast guard boats from the Wood End station.

The crew was in dories hauling in trawls and only the captain, his son, Frank; the boat's engineer, and Cook John Alves were aboard.

The four fought the fire 10 minutes and then, fearing an explosion, abandoned the boat.

EIGHT MEN ACCUSED IN GRAFT TRUE BILLS SCHEDULED TO FACE JURY NEXT TUESDAY

Slaton Decides Monday on Running Against Harris

FORMER GOVERNOR EXPECTED TO ASK PLACE IN SENATE

Interest in Slaton's Entry Overshadowing Other Campaigns for Various Statehouse Posts.

PERRY AND HOLDER PAY ENTRANCE FEES

Warm Campaign Seen in Gubernatorial Race and Contest for Position of State Farm Head.

Promise of definite announcement Monday of his decision as to making the race for United States senator against Senator William J. Harris, was made Saturday by former Governor John M. Slaton in a statement made at Brunswick, where he is in attendance upon the meeting of the Georgia Bar Association.

When shown an Associated Press dispatch containing the prediction of former Governor Thomas W. Hardwick, which was published throughout the state Friday, that "it was a ten to one shot" he would be a candidate, Mr. Slaton issued the following statement:

"That is the first I have heard of Senator Hardwick's statement. I have not definitely made up my mind. I will, however, have an announcement to make on Monday. I will return to Atlanta tonight, go over the mail which has reached my office since my departure, and will then reach a definite decision."

A large number of those attending the bar association meeting are close friends of Slaton and almost as a unit, according to reports received in Atlanta Saturday, they are predicting that he will enter the race.

Interest in the possible entry of Governor Slaton into the race for senator is overshadowing that for any of the state house offices, not even excepting the contest for governor in which five candidates are now actively at work. With the closing of the entry lists of the primary only three days off, reports from all over the state indicate that general interest has already been aroused in the various races to be decided at the primary of September 10.

Two Qualify for Governor.

James A. Perry, chairman of the state public service commission, and John N. Holder, former chairman of the state highway board, qualified for the gubernatorial race by paying their entrance fees Saturday. Immediately after qualifying Mr. Holder announced that he soon would open headquarters in Atlanta and proceed with an active campaign.

Mr. Perry already has launched his campaign, having made several speeches in different parts of the state. Mr. Holder has made no speeches as yet, but it is known that he is at work building up his fences throughout the state.

Reports Saturday from Lakeland, the home town of Senator Rivers, carried the information that elaborate arrangements are being made there for the opening speech of Mr. Rivers next Saturday. Several outstanding Georgia political leaders will speak on this occasion and it is expected that a tremendous crowd will be present. Following his speech at Lakeland, Senator Rivers has announced he will start an intensive speaking campaign that will carry him into every section of the state.

Others who are considering making an announcement to enter the race for governor include Hoke O'Kelley, former mayor of Loganville, now practicing law in Atlanta. Mr. O'Kelley is a World War veteran, 35 years of age, and is a graduate of the University of Georgia and the law school of Columbia University. He is one of the editors of Paton's digest of banking laws.

Fireworks Possible.

While the large number of candidates for various state house offices assures a spirited primary campaign, the real fireworks would come only in case former Governor Slaton announces for the senate. Both he and Senator Harris possess strong and devoted followings and the very intensity of the support they would receive undoubtedly would lead to as lively a contest as has been seen in Georgia in years.

The same situation would obtain in the Talmadge-Brown race for the office of secretary of agriculture. The last race between these two, which Mr. Talmadge won hands down, was marked for its warmth and it is freely predicted that the contest between them this summer also will see the sparks flying.

The other state house office contests probably will not arouse as much intense interest as those for senator and governor, although the five candidates for secretary of state undoubtedly will wage hard-fought campaigns.

Candidates for offices for which there will be opposition to the incum-

Gangland Rupture Brings New War

"Bugs" Moran and Ally Split and Guns Roar on Thronged Street; Gunman Is Killed.

CHICAGO, May 31.—(AP)—A reputed hireling killer was paid off in kind today with pedestrians on a busy southwest side corner witnesses to the transaction.

Shotguns, leveled over the side of a speeding automobile, ended the life of Philip Gnolfo, whose police record started with an arrest for gun-toting at Greensburg, Pa., in 1915, and progressed through extortion, alcohol peddling and alleged murder at so much per head.

The same shots wounded Carmelo Gueli, 48, Toledo, Ohio, and caused another occupant of Gnolfo's auto to be cut by flying glass. He was Joseph Fiannaca, 34, Rochester, N. Y., who said he was in the dry goods and oil business there.

Still more shots that strayed from their mark struck Edward Zlattos, a 14-year-old boy, who was passing the corner with his brother. He was wounded in the arms and legs.

One of the crimes of which Gnolfo was suspected was the slaying of Henry Spingola, gang lawyer and politician of the "Bloody Twentieth" ward, three years ago.

"Gnolfo was long overdue," Chief Investigator Patrick Roche said. "The boys say he 'got' Henry Spingola and had to duck out of town. It was only a few months ago that he dared to show his face in Chicago."

Gnolfo apparently was unaware he was trailed by the killers. When they fired the broadside killing him his auto crashed into a parked machine, veered over a sidewalk and plunged into the wall of a church. Gueli and Finnaca fled from the scene and were found later hiding in a private home a few doors away. Both told police they were in Chicago on legitimate business.

Gnolfo, police said, also was known as Abate. He was formerly allied with the now decimated Genna alcohol gang.

Rumors of a break between George "Bugs" Moran and Joe Aiello, formerly allied gang executives, caused police to investigate the possibility Gnolfo came to the city at the request of Aiello, with whom he was friendly, to open hostilities against Moran.

Witnesses said the death car contained five or six men.

COUNCIL TO ACT ON MONEY SHEET

Resignation of City Clerk Walter C. Taylor Comes Up Monday.

Adoption of the June finance sheet providing for appropriation of $16,190,000 for operation and maintenance of various departments of the Atlanta city government and for improvements for the entire year; consideration of the resignation of Walter C. Taylor, veteran city clerk, with the probability of election of his successor, and disposition of many routine matters face the meeting of council at 2 o'clock Monday afternoon.

The finance sheet carries additional allocations of about $87,000 for various needs of departments and improvements.

Acceptance of the resignation of the city clerk Saturday was regarded as a certainty, and there appeared little likelihood that any member of council would insist that Taylor, convicted of one count of bribery in an indictment carrying 21 counts, stand trial looking toward impeachment.

Will Offer Resignation.

Alderman G. Everett Millican, of the tenth ward; Alderman Alvin Richards, of the thirteenth ward, and Alderman Ed A. Gilliam, of the twelfth, announced they would ask for appointment of such a committee if Taylor's resignation did not come to council Monday. The city clerk, however, has announced that he will offer his resignation effective immediately, and this is regarded as a closing of the matter, just as soon as it is accepted.

J. Henson Tatum, executive secretary of former Mayor Walter A. Sims for four years, and for the past three years secretary of Mayor I. N. Ragsdale, Saturday loomed as a formidable aspirant as Taylor's successor.

Ed L. Barnes, veteran chief deputy clerk in Mr. Taylor's office, also was a candidate with strong backing.

Al Dunn, formerly chief deputy clerk of Fulton county superior court, was mentioned Saturday as a dark horse. He, however, stated Friday that he was not a candidate.

Three Mentioned.

Among others mentioned as possible successors to Mr. Taylor were Tom Goodwin, attorney and a former member of council; Sam Freeman, also a former member of council; Press Huddleston, who contended unsuccessfully for the position in a race with Taylor 16 years ago.

There loomed the possibility Saturday that selection of Mr. Taylor's successor will not be named Monday, but that Mr. Barnes will act in that capacity until the council session of June 16.

Among routine matters slated for consideration are several small waterworks and sewer improvements to be financed from funds supplied by the 1926 bond issue; consideration of an adverse report on a proposal to permit the sale of ice cream on the streets of Atlanta when wrapped in sanitary wrappers; rebates to several contractors in construction of the $2,700,000 worth of new schools under the 1926 bond issue.

$87,000 Appropriations.

The $87,000 in additional appropriations which Councilman Wiley L. Moore will recommend in the name of the finance committee of council follows:

Additional cars for the Atlanta police department, $10,000; street repairs, $15,000; sewer repairs, $10,000; removal of the government hangar to Candler field, Atlanta's airport, $5,000; repairs on Luckie and Courtland streets, $10,000 and $5,000, respectively; fight against mosquitoes for health department, $5,000; relaying of car tracks and additions to Forsyth street bridge, $4,320; Atlanta freight bureau, $5,000; suits, law department, $2,000; police supplies, health department, $1,000; four automobiles, health department, $2,250; relief department, burial fund, $500; extra help, warden's office, $250; Municipal Utilities Rate Association, $1,500; water department office supplies, $1,000; extra pay rolls, city hall, $1,100; repairs and replacements, city hall, $1,500; traffic lights, $1,200; extra guards, city prison, $2,600; widening of Mitchell street in front of the new Atlanta city hall, $1,500; chairs for the city planning commission, $180; record room for tax collector and street improvement collector, $1,036; clerk for record room salary for six months, $900.

St. Augustine Sees First Whale Landed

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla., May 31.—(AP)—Gilbert Phillips and Leon Canova went fishing for sea bass and caught a whale—the first ever landed here.

For 12 hours these disciples of Isaac Walton battled with the 3,000-pound mammal after it had become entangled in their surf lines. At low tide they succeeded in passing a cable around the whale's tail and by use of an automobile wrecker they dragged it ashore.

Large crowds viewed the monster which lived on land eight hours and then was put to death.

DEKALB CENSUS COUNT IS 70,244

Final and Official Figure Shows Gain of 26,193, or 59.4 Per Cent.

The population of DeKalb county was given as 70,244 in a final and official announcement made Saturday by Dr. Elizabeth Broach, local census director.

The figure represents an increase of 26,193 from the 1920 population of 44,051, or a proportionate increase of 59.4 per cent.

Decatur, the seat of the county, has a population of 13,268, more than double the 1920 figure of 6,150. And that portion of the borough of Atlanta lying within DeKalb county has 24,719 residents. In 1920 it had 11,975.

The county, according to the census figures, contains 2,472 farms. In 1920 there were 2,525.

Other final census announcements on the population of the various parts of the Atlanta area are expected to be made shortly by Dr. Broach. They will be of the boroughs which compose the city, and of the population of Fulton county.

CANDIDATES PLAN DRIVE FOR VOTES IN LOCAL PRIMARY

Three Meetings Slated for Tuesday Night; Interest Centers About Four-Cornered Mayoralty Race.

With the municipal primary, in which 22 officials of the borough of Atlanta will be nominated, only 18 days off, 44 aspirants for the various posts Saturday laid plans for intensive drives for votes this week and three meetings were slated for Tuesday.

Interest in the nomination of a mayor, in which Wiley L. Moore, James L. Key, Ben T. Huiet and William H. Johnson are the contenders, is expected to reach fever heat this week. This contest has overshadowed every other race, and bids fair to be one of the hardest contested campaigns staged in Atlanta in many years.

The meetings Tuesday are at 12:30 o'clock in the afternoon at Rich's tea room under the auspices of the Atlanta League of Women Voters; at 7:30 o'clock at night at the Smillie school, in the fourth ward, under the auspices of the Fourth Ward Improvement Club, and at 8 o'clock at the John B. Gordon school in the 11th ward, under the direction of the Key campaign.

Mr. Moore, Mr. Key, Mr. Huiet and Mr. Johnson again will take the stump this week and will continue to fight it out for votes subject to the primary of June 18.

The Key headquarters announced Saturday that the former mayor will take the fight into every ward in Atlanta between now and election day through a series of meetings.

Poll Workers Barred.

Poll workers in the four-cornered battle between John L. Cone, Frank R. Fling, Homer C. Denton and John E. Chambers for the judgeship of the second division of the recorder's court will be barred, according to an agreement between those candidates which was announced Saturday.

This is the first time in the history of Atlanta that all the candidates in any primary have entered such an agreement. It means not only that paid workers will be barred, but that no cards will be distributed by friends of the candidates at the polls.

"Previous to Saturday there were 46 qualified candidates in race, but A. Guy Smith, seeking the nomination as councilman from the ninth ward, formally withdrew, supporting W. Paul Carpenter, incumbent.

This leaves Mr. Carpenter opposed by Homer Foster, and these two will battle it out.

Another withdrawal in the race for nomination to the board of education from the sixth ward was announced Saturday by J. E. Parker, thus leaving Mrs. Julia O'Keefe Nelson, incumbent, and James P. McGrath in the field.

"My business will not permit to serve as I would wish to in the event of my election," Mr. Parker said, "and I have decided to withdraw, leaving my friends to vote as they see fit for the remaining contenders.

Unique Agreement.

The unique agreement which the aspirants for the recorder's post have entered into follows:

"This agreement made and entered into on this date, by and between John E. Chambers, John L. Cone, Homer C. Denton and Frank R. Fling, and

"Whereas, we and each of us are opposing candidates for the office of judgeship of the second division of recorder's court of the city of Atlanta, subject to the primary to be held in the city of Atlanta on June 18, 1930, and

"Whereas, we, being the only candidates in said race, do hereby mutually agree by and among ourselves as follows:

"That we, jointly and severally, do hereby agree, promise and pledge ourselves not to employ any workers at the polls on election day in any precinct in any ward in the city of Atlanta; that no person shall be authorized or directed by us to distribute cards or to solicit votes on June 18, 1930; we also agree and pledge ourselves not to supply cards to any worker or person to be used at said polls or distributed to voters; that any friend of us or either of us who may be at said polls on said election day in our behalf or who may happen to have some of our cards in their possession on said date will be there and in possession of said cards without our knowledge or request.

"It is our desire and object in this agreement to avoid suspicion of corruption, as we fell this office and the duties of the judge who may be elected therefor, too sacred to be contaminated with political influences in any manner whatsoever as we believe the voters of the city of Atlanta sufficiently intelligent to vote their convictions regardless of solicitations or cards on election day.

"In witness whereof, we have hereunto pledged and bind ourselves by this as a gentlemen's agreement and expect to comply with and be bound thereby on the election day."

More than 100 Fulton county veterans, including about 35 from the Old Soldiers' Home, will board the official Confederate Veterans' special train at the Terminal station at 7 o'clock Monday morning for the trip to the annual reunion to be held at Biloxi, Miss., beginning Wednesday. DIXIE ECONOMISTS TO CONVENE HERE

Leaders of South Will Make Study of Needs of Section.

One of the most important gatherings of the year, the Southern economic conference, will convene Monday at the Atlanta Biltmore.

This conference, representing the states of Virginia, North and South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee and Kentucky will meet for the purpose of making a careful study of the economic problems that confront this group of states.

The movement for this gathering was initiated at a meeting of a group of business and agricultural leaders in Atlanta, April 7, when it was determined that the importance of the problems confronting the south, especially problems of agricultural and industrial character made such a conference imperative.

The Georgia committee of the conference is composed of H. Lane Young, of the Citizens & Southern National bank, Atlanta, chairman; H. G. Hastings, of Atlanta, and J. M. Patterson, of Albany. Hugh MacRae, Wilmington, N. C., has acted as general chairman since the meeting of April 7.

Freaks in the News

FUNDAMENTALISM FATAL TO FISHERMAN.

The Jonah and the whale story caused the death of a fisherman in Ferrol, Azores, yesterday. A group were arguing about the truth of the story, until finally the fisherman said it was just as easy for the whale to swallow Jonah as it was for him to swallow a live sardine. He proceeded to demonstrate and choked to death.

PA'S COOKING PROVES DANGEROUS.

Because hard-working Mamma Soto, of Brooklyn, N. Y., went vacationing yesterday, Papa Soto did the cooking and now he and the four little Sotos are in the hospital recovering. Pa opened four cans of soup to start the meal off, and in the excitement of cutting the bread forgot to cook the soup the right way.

JAILED FOR EFFORT TO CORRECT ERROR.

A sense of justice has landed Edmond Fontaine in jail in Baltimore. He saw a quotation from "The Raven" misquoted on a statue to Edgar Allen Poe and attempted to rectify the error with a chisel. He was locked up charged with defacing the monument. The inscription read "Dreaming dreams no mortals ever dared to dream before" and it should read "mortal."

IT'S REALLY DRY IN NICARAGUA.

The dry season is now raging in Nicaragua and snakes, lizards and birds are hard put to it to find wet spots to cool off in. There are no bootleggers in Nicaragua so the beasts are crawling into water containers owned by United States army engineers who are there surveying the proposed Nicaragua canal. The snakes and birds get along quite well together, but not so well with the soldiers who refuse to go near them. Fresh water has to be brought in with great difficulty and the work is being held up.

NO PROHIBITION LAW FOR DOGS.

Living a dog's life has its compensation, Bozo, a small terrier, of Birmingham, Ala., has discovered.

Bozo was arrested by city police when two quarts of whisky were found in his kennel. Odell Cameron, negro owner of the dog, disclaimed ownership and when the case against Bozo was appealed from police court to county court, the charge was nol prossed by Judge R. Russell McElroy, on recommendation of the city attorney's office.

THOUGHT THEY WENT BY NUMBERS.

Warden Lawes, of Sing Sing prison, has more worries than one. It seems that he has in his care three John Smiths, three William Browns, three James Joneses, three Frank Williamses, two John Johnsons, two James Browns, two Frank Joneses, two Daniel McCarthys, two John Kelleys and two James Kelleys. It seems that a month ago there were two Abraham Roths and the wrong one was paroled. A mistake which engendered much hard feeling. The wrong one is still free and now the parole board is exercising extra care to prevent a repetition of the mistake.

WONDER WHICH TALKED MOST.

Marius De Saedis entered a telephone booth in a Passaic (N. J.) drugstore to telephone his sweetie. The conversation lasted the usual time, usual that is for sweeties, and when Marius emerged from the booth the store had been shut up for the night. Everybody had gone home an hour ago. Marius phoned for the police and they dug him out.

STILL AND JONES QUALIFY FOR RACE

Veteran Labor Leader Issues Platform of Reforms He Will Work For

Announcement and qualification of Luther Still, veteran labor leader in Georgia and throughout the south, for renomination to his seat in the Georgia assembly from Fulton county, and of Johnny J. Jones for the post now held by Miss Bessie Kempton, who has declared she will retire, featured developments Saturday in the legislative race from Fulton county subject to the primary of September 10.

Entry lists close Tuesday, and all those seeking to enter the lists must qualify by that time.

Mr. Still is opposed by Don K. Johnston. Saturday Mr. Still issued a platform of reforms he will ask if re-elected to the assembly, including institution of a system of civil service for the Fulton county employes, thus assuring them their jobs during good behavior. Department heads, however, would be exempted from the civil service provisions.

Among other things which he will champion are election of judges of the municipal courts of Atlanta by a vote of the people and election of the judge of the juvenile court by the same method.

Mr. Jones declared he would issue a platform on which he will base his race within the next few days.

Small Not to Run.

At the same time Dr. Sam Small, of The Constitution and one of the best-known political commentators in the country, issued a statement in which he declared he will not become a candidate for one of the three posts. He had been mentioned prominently as a probable candidate and had been urged to offer.

For the fourth time, Mr. Still entered the lists with the indorsement of the Atlanta Federation of Trades and allied labor organizations. He declared he will predicate his campaign on "my record of honest, fair, constructive and efficient service to the people of the county."

"During my incumbency I fought for appropriations for common schools and the institutions of higher learning of Georgia and obtained substantial additions to the tentative appropriations for this purpose through the assistance of my colleagues," Mr. Still said.

"I was a member of several important committees of the assembly during the last session and was chairman of the labor committee, regarded as one of the most important from a general economic and social standpoint in the gift of the speaker of the house.

Functioned Without Friction.

"The committee functioned without friction, despite the fact that it was composed for the most part of large industrialists whose interests were subject to any regulations which might be recommended.

"My right is regarded in legislative circles as responsible for saving the state department of archives and history and the state welfare department and I have letters of commendation from Miss Ruth Blair for my work in this connection and also from Dr. M. L. Duggan, state superintendent of schools, for effective work for them.

"It was I who led the fight for appropriations for remodeling the state capitol and Richard Russell, speaker of the house, favored by deferring a vote on this matter while I and some of the others who supported the measure brought in enough members of the

BOYKIN UNDECIDED WHICH DEFENDANT HE WILL TRY FIRST

Cases of W. E. Saunders or Alderman J. E. Turner Are Reported Likely To Be Called.

TRIAL OF OTHERS TO FOLLOW SOON

Boykin Says He Expects To Prosecute All Eight Before Court Recesses for Summer.

With the probability that the state will call either the case of Alderman J. E. Turner or Councilman William E. Saunders, the trials of eight men accused on various charges as a result of the long grand jury probe into municipal corruption are set for Tuesday morning in the criminal division of the Fulton superior court presided over by Judge Virlyn B. Moore.

Besides Turner and Saunders, the cases of the following are on Judge Moore's docket:

Former Councilman Harry York, of the sixth ward, already under a chaingang sentence for bribery; Jack White, friend and business associate of York, also already under chaingang sentence for defrauding the city; Bruce Baxter, superintendent of the municipal garage; Alderman J. Allen Couch, of the fifth ward; J. E. (Red) Robinson, former employe of the city construction department, accused of larceny, and Wiley W. Melton, custodian of the municipal auditorium-armory, accused of theft of city funds.

Solicitor-General John A. Boykin Saturday declared he had not determined which of the eight men would be placed on trial first, but did state that unless present plans were changed all would go on trial before the court turns its attention to other business or takes a recess for the summer.

Those in close touch with the movements of the prosecuting staff Saturday, however, expressed the belief that Councilman Saunders would be the first of the octet to face a jury, with Dr. Turner as the "first alternate."

Both Saunders and Dr. Turner are accused of bribery, the former being charged with having accepted a bribe of $300 to put through an ordinance considered of vital inteerst to the dry cleaning industry. Sannders is chairman of the city board of firemasters and the indictment charges that he used that office to further his bribe-taking cause.

Dr. Turner is jointly indicted with Baxter, but it was seen as certain that the two would demand a severance and the Turner case called first. The true bill charges they accepted a bribe of $450 and Turner a small motor car from a motor truck sales corporation for obtaining for the corporation an order for the purchase of several trucks and the overhauling of others already in the city service.

Solicitor-General Boykin Saturday announced that the grand jury's plea for information concerning alleged tampering with the jurors or prospective jurors used in the trial of Walter C. Taylor, convicted a week ago Saturday night of bribery, already had met with results.

The solicitor general said both he and his assistant, E. A. Stephens, had received telephone information to the extent that at least one prospective juror was "offered a lot of money" if he should be placed on the jury and bring about an acquittal of Taylor.

"The grand jury will get all of these reports and we will run down every one of them," Mr. Boykin said. "We are going to leave no stone unturned until every one connected with the jury tampering plot is brought to justice."

Five men, including two license inspectors working under Taylor already are indicted on charges of embracery, the legal term for approaching a juror. The license inspectors, W. E. Howard and R. H. Shepherd Saturday posted $1,000 bonds to guarantee their appearances in court where their cases are called for trial. S. B. Todd, indicted jointly with Howard and Stepherd and Wyatt A. Adcock and F. L. Norton, the last named a son-in-law of the indicted Councilman Charles L. Chosewood, are expected to post bonds Monday.

Italy's Financial Condition Improves

ROME, May 31.—(AP)—Senator Antonio Mosconi, minister of finance, presented the budget to the chamber of deputies today and said that Italy's financial situation was comforting.

The budget totals 19,349,000,000 lire (about $967,450,000), which is an increase of 778,000,000 lire (about $38,900,000) over 1929.

Senator Mosconi took pride in the year's gains, saying that the deficit in the commercial balance had been reduced last year from 7,361,000,000 lire (about $368,050,000) to 6,411,000,000 lire (about $32,550,000). He added that the currency circulating had been reduced, while the reserves of the Bank of Italy increased so that the reserves represent 66 per cent of the current and 59 per cent of all debts at sight.

COUNTIES ARE URGED TO PERMIT FISHING

Low Waters Endanger Waste in Closed Sections, Twitty States.

Stating that low water in some of the best fishing streams of southern Georgia was causing the death of the fish, Peter S. Twitty, state commissioner of game and fish, suggested Saturday that fishing in a sportsmanlike manner be permitted in those counties where June is a closed season and drought conditions warrant.

Control of fishing in the counties, Mr. Taylor pointed out, is wholly vested in the counties, the state department of game and fish having no voice in the locally-made laws.

"Many of the best fishing streams and waters of south Georgia are rapidly drying up and the fish life therein is imperilled. Heroic measures are now being undertaken by this department to rescue fish from low places where they are likely to perish and transfer them to larger running streams.

"It is believed that in those sections most seriously affected by drought, unless the people are allowed to take fish by reasonable and sportsmanlike methods, the fish in such waters will be wasted and the very purpose of real conservation will be defeated. If conservation means anything at all, it means intelligent use."

Mr. Twitty stated that whether or not fishing would be permitted in the affected counties was entirely in the discretion of the local officials. He also said that much confusion exists in the mind of the people as to which counties have June as a closed season, and expressed the hope that the next session of the state legislature would adopt a uniform, state-wide law based on accurate knowledge of the spawning time of the various species of fish in the different sections of the state.

Jacobs Pharmacy Establishes Advisory Board To Interpret Needs in Various Parts of the City

Members of the advisory board established by Jacobs Pharmacy, which was announced Saturday. Sinclair Jacobs, who has been elected president of the company, and William T. Rich, vice president and general manager, are shown in the center at the top. On the left is James P. Irvin, and right is Willie W. Gross. In the middle row (left to right) are: Irving G. Katenbrink, David H. Jacobs, Marie Leidy and Sherwood L. Astin. Bottom: Lamar D. Morse, Madison W. Brooks, Thomas H. Brannen and Leonard N. Camp.

The second man to head the Jacobs' Pharmacy Company as president in 51 years of operation has been elected to that office in the person of Sinclair Jacobs, who succeeds his father, the late Dr. Joseph Jacobs, organizer of the Jacobs' Pharmacy Company in 1879 and president until the time of his death last year.

The directors' meeting at which Mr. Jacobs was elected president also resulted in the election of William T. Rich, treasurer of the company since 1915, as vice president and treasurer, and the election of an advisory board of ten.

The purpose of the advisory board, composed of officials and employes, most of whom have been with the company a number of years, will be to interpret the needs and desires of the public in the various sections of the city served by Jacobs' stores and report on such matters to the board of directors.

The purpose of the advisory board, composed of officials and employes, most of whom have been with the company a number of years, will be to interpret the needs and desires of the public in the various sections of the city served by Jacobs' stores and report on such matters to the board of directors.

The personnel of the advisory board and the length of service is as follows: David H. Jacobs, manager of the main store and supervisor of the south side, 33 years; Marie Leidy, buyer of toiletries and novelties, 11 years; Leonard N. Camp, chief of the laboratories, 17 years; Irvin G. Katenbrink, buyer of proprietary remedies, 11 years; Sherwood L. Astin, display manager, 17 years; James P. Irvin, manager of the soda division, 2 years; Madison W. Brooks, manager of the Fox theater branch, 20 years; Lamar D. Morse, manager of store at Ponce de Leon and Highland avenues, 11 years; Willie W. Gross, manager of the Pershing Point store and north side supervisor, 17 years, and Thomas H. Brannen, manager of the Palmer laboratories, 26 years.

Sinclair Jacobs, newly elected president of the Jacobs' Pharmacy Company, is an Atlantan born and reared, and the same is true of most of the officials and the 225 employes of the company.

Mr. Jacobs received his preparatory education here and in 1909 he received his diploma from the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, the same institution from which his father was graduated in 1879.

In 1909 he started in the laboratories of the Jacobs' Pharmacy Company, and in 1919, following his return from France, where he served with the Emory unit in the A. E. F., he was made vice president and general manager of the company, a post he held until his elevation to the presidency.

William T. Rich, the new vice president and treasurer, is a son of the late Daniel Rich, formerly vice president and treasurer of H. Rich & Bros. Company, and he also was born and reared here. He received his education at Boys' High school and Georgia Tech, and in 1917 and 1918 he served as instructor in airplane radio ground work at Tech. He came to the company in 1915 as treasurer.

The Jacobs' Pharmacy Company now has 15 stores at vantage points throughout the city. The establishment of each of these stores came as a result of popular demand. When the addition to the First National Bank building is completed the store will move its headquarters back to its old location there where it has been since 1884.

The company was established in Athens, Ga., in 1879, but was removed to Atlanta in 1884 by Dr. Jacobs. At that time Dr. Jacobs took over the interests of the Taylor pharmacy, which had been operated by James A. Taylor and his son, Walter A. Taylor, from 1854 to 1884, so that these interests have had only two ownerships from 1854 to the present time.

WOMAN RELATES PLOT TO KILL LOVER'S WIFE

Husband and Paramour Face Trial for First-Degree Murder.

JEFFERSON, Ohio, May 31.—(AP) A young woman's quest for happiness through love of a married man and the slaying of his wife culminated today in the filing of first degree murder charges against Mrs. Maude Lowther, 22-year-old housemaid, and Trilby Smith, 26, the man she loved.

The two were arraigned today before Justice of the Peace T. J. Weatherstone and held for the grand jury June 9 in jail without bond. Both pleaded not guilty.

Calmly and without emotion Mrs. Lowther, a dark-haired woman with sparkling black eyes, who says she is a quarter-blood Indian, told officials and newspapermen how Smith plotted with her to slay his 28-year-old wife, who was shot through the temple on a lonely road west of Ashtabula Thursday night.

Both defendants were said to have confessed yesterday to the plot to slay the woman, each blaming the other.

Mrs. Lowther told how her quest for happiness began earlier in her youth on her parent's farm near Clarksburg, W. Va., where she was born.

She was the oldest of seven children. There was very little happiness then—mostly just work.

Two years ago she met a man 25 years her senior. It was at a dance in Clarksburg. He promised many nice things. They were married and she was happy until he became jealous of her, she said, and left her.

A little more than two weeks ago she met Smith at a motion picture theater. She fell in love and happiness returned. He then told her he was married and had two small children.

Mrs. Lowther said he told her his wife nagged him and he wanted to be rid of her. She said he gave her a revolver and instructed her when to use it.

Mrs. Lowther then reiterated her alleged confession of how she hid in a clump of bushes while Smith drove up with his wife and two small children and how she fired the revolver at the woman and fled.

"I loved Trilby, but now I hate him as much as I loved him," Mrs. Lowther said. "I wouldn't have told anything if he hadn't squawked. He's a double-crosser and I hate him."

Flood-Stricken Negroes Sing Praise of Red Cross

ALEXANDRIA, La., May 31.—(AP)—Plantation negroes homeless up the Red river valley, today sang their praises of Red Cross rations while about Alexandria a mighty battle was in progress to curb continued inundation by the rampant river.

Negro spirituals drifted out from the refugee camps in Natchitoches and Red river parishes where more than 10,000 persons were driven from their homes and preparations were made for Sunday camp meetings with services of thanks for deliverance on the recession of the waters.

Facing a flood crest revised upwards, levee and highway forces today threw additional crews into action to strengthen levees and attempt to hold Rapides bayou emergency dike for the protention of the Enterprise addition to the city and the wide stretch of valuable farm lands extending to Boyce.

Alexandria prepared for a long siege against flood with the raising of the crest prediction here from 39.7 feet to from 40 to 40.5 feet by June 3. This would place the river 4 to 4.5 feet above flood level with a reading here today of 39.4 feet.

Through piling and bagging around a 15-foot crevasse in Rapides levee 60 workmen today had temporarily held back the rising tide, but little if any hope was entertained of holding the water in sight. The 50 families in Enterprise had deserted their homes and farm tenants in the path were ready to leave.

With the river falling in Natchitoches and Red River parishes much improvement in the upper valley situation was reported. There the thousands, mostly negro farm tenants and their families, rejoiced at the recession of the waters and cashed their checks for provisions supplied in the refugee camps.

In the Shreveport area the river had dropped to 33.5 feet, more than five feet below flood level and refugees were beginning to return through the mud to their farm homes to make preparations for the planting of crops where the water had subsided.

Health authorities in Caddo, Red River and Natchitoches parishes today were making the second round of administering serum in an intensive campaign against typhoid, while a state-wide appeal was being made for additional funds to feed and rehabilitate the flood sufferers.

With four national Red Cross workers in the field the registered number of refugees in the camps dotting the valley continued to roll up emphasizing the acuteness of the situation.

NEGRO DIES OF HURTS ADMINISTERED BY MOB

CHICKASHA, Okla., May 31.—(AP) Lynch law today exacted the life of Henry Argo, 19-year-old negro charged with attacking a white woman—the second member of his race to die at the hands of a mob in the southwest within a month.

A mob of more than 1,000 men and boys which stormed the Grady county jail intermittently throughout the night and battled national guardsmen, inflicted fatal injuries on the negro before he was removed to a hospital at Oklahoma City, where he died this afternoon.

A bullet fired by an unidentified member of the mob pierced the negro's brain as he was caged helpless in his cell.

Later, when it was believed the mob spirit had subsided and spectators were permitted in the jail, the negro was stabbed near the heart by the husband of the woman alleged to have been assaulted.

Early this month a mob burned the courthouse and jail at Sherman, Texas, killing a negro charged with the same offense and dragged his body through the streets, later burning it.

Unlike the rioting at Sherman, no attempt was made here to harm other negroes. The situation was quiet tonight.

Six members of the Chickasha artillery battery of the Oklahoma National Guard suffered minor injuries from missiles thrown by the mob. Several citizens were injured.

The husband and three other members of the turbulent crowd were arrested but were released later without bond.

B. F. Holding, county attorney, announced after the negro's death that an inquest would be held Tuesday. Governor W. J. Holloway, who had advocated firm dealing with the mob while the attack was at its height, detailed J. Betty King, attorney general, to the task of assisting in the investigation.

Reported Dead Twice.

Twice reported dead from his wounds, the negro clung tenaciously to life. The first report came when it was learned he was wounded, the second when, wrapped in a blanket, he was carried through a crowd that officers believed still possessed the potentialities of a mob. He was loaded into an ambulance and rushed to the University of Oklahoma hospital at Oklahoma City. He died about an hour after arrival there.

With the husband as a leader, the mob assembled early last night after Argo had been arrested and identified by his victim as the man who, she said, had attacked her in their little dug-out home a mile from Chickasha.

Deputy sheriffs repulsed the first advance on the jail. As the mob grew more menacing, local national guardsmen were ordered out by Charles F. Barrett, Oklahoma adjutant-general.

Using battering rams and sledge hammers, about 100 men crashed in the steel door of the jail just as the national guardsmen arrived in a truck, clearing a path with high-aimed machine gun volleys.

Drawing sidearms, Captain E. R. Smith and Lieutenant H. G. White kept the leaders from storming the second floor where the negro's cell was located, but earlier a lone rioter had gained access to the upper corridor and had fired point-blank at Argo, neither shot taking effect.

Drive Mob Away.

With the arrival of more guardsmen the mob was driven from the jail. Captain Smith and his 30-odd men held the besieged structure until a skirmish in which tear gas bombs were thrown. The fumes drove out the guardsmen and rioters alike, momentarily. The mob permitted the transfer of other prisoners, including two negroes, to the city jail.

Rioters cut light and telephone wires, flung brickbats, fired the national guard truck in front of the building and at least a dozen times attempted to set fire to the jail.

Bolder men advanced to the door of the cell in which the negro was confined and attacked the walls, seeking to make an opening through which they could extricate their intended victim. Argo fought back with desperation, hurling whatever missiles reached his hands. Finally he wrenched an iron bar from one of the attackers and flailed about with it.

Rioters, seeking clubs and levers, tore water pipes from the interior of the jail, loosing a flood to add to the confusion. Officers believed the negro was shot during this stage, probably by someone who climbed the ivy-covered walls outside and fired into the cell.

The husband, an overalled tenant farmer who had been much in demand during the day among corner crowds for retelling of his part, collapsed on the jail lawn this afternoon. He was taken to a hospital, where physicians said they believed he had been overcome by fatigue.

SALESMAN ONCE GRAY-HAIRED USES LEA'S TONIC—LOOKS YOUNG AGAIN

Marvelous Change Shown by Photos, Before and After Using a Famous Hair Tonic

Thousands Banish Gray Hair This Way

"I started getting gray at twenty years of age and finally became so gray people often called me the gray-haired chap, when they didn't know my name. It actually was a handicap as a salesman and made it hard to land a new job. Everybody said I looked ten or fifteen years older than my real age, but I swore I would never use a dye. Finally three years ago some friends of mine began using Lea's Hair Tonic and I was amazed the way it worked for them. They urged me to begin using it too, which I did. Gradually day by day my hair began changing back to its youthful color. Just like magic it changed until folks who hadn't seen me for several months hardly could believe their eyes. I've since passed the good word along to scores of gray-haired friends. It is safe and easy to use and gives a natural youthful appearance to the hair that is great. I'm sending a photo taken of me when I was real gray and one taken afterward and you can see for yourself," writes W. W. Atkinson, Salesman, 8106 S. Hoover St., Los Angeles, Calif.

The results Mr. Atkinson obtained can be equalled by anyone, it seems, in the easiest sort of a way at home. Just a drop on the finger tip, rubbed into the scalp here and there each evening, begins stimulating the circulation and day by day notices a delightful change. Once the scalp is rid of dandruff—hair is growing vigorously and gray is gone—just an occasional application each week or so keeps the scalp and hair in beautiful condition, no matter how old one may be.

Made by the nationall known Lea Tonic Co., it is sold by druggists most everywhere now, $1 per bottle on positive guarantee that money will be refunded if results after sixty days are not entirely satisfactory. If your own druggist hasn't Lea's Hair Tonic send dollar bill, check, stamps or money order to Lea Tonic Co., Brentwood, Md., for bottle return mail postage paid.—(adv.)

Dixie's Civil War Veterans To Gather at Festive Board

ATLANTAN HEADS OPENING SPONSOR GROUP

LENWOOD H. BOWMAN.
Associated Press Staff Writer.

BILOXI, Miss., May 31.—(AP)—Warriors of the 60's will be face to face with fiery fighters of later dates as the United Confederate Veterans open their 40th reunion here next week, the rostrum bearing speakers outstanding for statesmanship and government defense policy as well as love for a dead cause.

The colorful opening night, Tuesday, southern Memorial Day, will ring with the oratory of former United States Senator John Sharp Williams, whose caustic wit ten years ago left indelible impressions on a congress he deserted after years of service.

None the less remembered will be Rear Admiral Thomas Pickett Magruder, United States navy, whose outspoken published expressions of the country's naval policy a few years ago were stemmed by the navy department.

Both born in Yazoo county, Mississippi, these speakers will be stamping the home grounds at this year's reunion gathering here on the Mississippi gulf coast, home place of the Confederacy's president, Jefferson Davis.

The older generation will speak through its commander-in-chief, General R. A. Snead, of Oklahoma City, another native Mississippian, while the sons of the Confederacy, who by custom sponsor the opening, will be represented by John Ashley Jones, of Atlanta, Ga., commander-in-chief.

Capping the opening climax, the United Daughters of the Confederacy, only Confederate body not in annual session, will have its president general, Mrs. L. M. Bashinsky, of Troy, Ala., as its representative, and the Southern Memorial Association, in joint meeting, will present its president general, Mrs. A. McD. Wilson, of Atlanta.

The reunion's mammoth gathering will be the opening night, these three Confederate organizations assembling as one in the specially erected auditorium at Camp Snead, reunion encampment.

The reunion curtain will rise to the stirring strains of the Star Spangled Banner and Dixie, played by the United States Marine band, attending the gathering through government permission. The official reunion band, the Clarksville, Ark., boys' unit, and the Birmingham, Ala., police band also are on the program.

As at previous reunions, the opening includes introduction of high officials, among them this year Harry Rene Lee, of Nashville, Tenn., adjutant general and chief of staff of the Confederates, and the like representative of the sons, Walter L. Hopkins, of Richmond, Va.

There likewise will be welcoming addresses of the governor of Mississippi, Theo G. Bilbo, and John L. Kennedy, mayor of Biloxi, who will present the mayors attending.

This opening observance Tuesday night, June 3, will precede the sessions of the sons Wednesday, at which they will elect officers, with this business coming before the veterans Thursday, the same day the Memorial Association names its officers.

The grand finale comes Friday when the combined aggregations will celebrate the annual reunion parade, with a few of the remnants of a one-time formidable army still marching on foot.

Sidelights of the reunion will include dedication of the Biloxi bridge on the old Spanish Trail the opening day, and formal opening of the nearby Gulf Port, Mississippi, municipal airport, Wednesday, both accompanied by winging army and navy planes.

Bank Bandits Object Of Widespread Search

DAWSON SPRINGS, Ky., May 31.—(AP)—Officers in western Kentucky and southern Indiana counties tonight were hunting four men who held up and robbed the First National Bank of Dawson Springs of between $2,500 and $3,000 this morning.

The bandits, dressed as miners, fled in a sedan bearing Indiana license M-813, toward Henderson, Ky. They succeeded in covering up their trail after leaving Dawson Springs.

Two of the bandits, both armed with pistols and their faces blackened, walked into the bank soon after it opened this morning and compelled W. A. Morris, assistant cashier, to lie down on the floor while one of them scooped up all the currency and silver in sight and the other forced two patrons into the directors' room at the point of a pistol. A third stood guard at the bank entrance while the fourth waited at the wheel of the automobile parked in front.

The bandits put the money in a burlap sack, ran from the bank, jumped into the car and sped north. In their haste the bandits overlooked an amount about as large as they obtained.

Northern Presbyterians Vote For Union; Give Women Voice

Will Go About Merging Various Northern Sects Before Making New Overtures to South.

CINCINNATI, May 31.—(AP)—Further steps toward the unification of all churches having the Presbyterian form of government were taken by the 142d general assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., with the approval today of a report from that body's church co-operation and union department.

The department was authorized to take up a plan for organic union with the United Presbyterian church, the Reformed Church in America and other Reformed churches, and was instructed to report back to the next annual meeting of the assembly.

Favorable action had been anticipated on a vote to merge also with the Presbyterian Church in the United States, which is the southern branch of the denomination, having its own assembly and government, but at the recent meeting of that branch action was taken forestalling any immediate consummation of the plan.

Northern Union Stressed.

The southern branch first adopted a majority report disapproving the unification proposal but later another report was substituted permitting a commission to make further investigation during the coming year.

Friendly messages from the Presbyterian Church in the United States and from the United Presbyterian church, which is now meeting at Des Moines, were read at today's sessions. The action of the United Presbyterians on the merger plan still is awaited.

The report of the church co-operation and union department submitted by J. Ross Stevenson, of Princeton, N. J., chairman, indicated that the greatest stress for the time being is to be laid on the unification of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., which is the northern branch, and the Reformed Church in America.

Describing regional conferences held last year, the department said that the union of these two denominations should be kept clearly in view, regardless of any larger merging of the Presbyterian family.

Women Get Voice.

The general assembly amended its convention today, in accordance with a favorable vote from the Presbyterians, whereby it joined the Congregationalists, the Methodists and Baptists in giving women a voice in the administration of church affairs.

An overture officially was adopted approving the election and ordination of women as ruling elders. In this capacity the women will have the privilege of participating in the ruling powers of the local churches, the presbyteries and the synods.

This also gives them the privilege of being elected commissioners to the general assembly with the probability that the 143d assembly will see women representatives taking a hand in the international affairs of the church.

The bars still remain, however, against the ordination of women as pastors, for the committee on overtures reported today that the presbyteries had voted down, 171 to 109, a proposal to extend them the powers of the ministry.

The vote on the overture giving them the privilege of being elders was 160 to 120. These figures disclosed that the question of the participation of women attracted unusual interest, for the 280 presbyteries which responded in the voting represented virtually the entire number in the church.

Through the adoption of resolutions offered by the standing commission on pension, the assembly made it possible for ministers to be pensioned after October 1, 1930, without the requirement of retirement.

The pension age is 65. All who have passed the age of 70 by next October and who had been in active service for the five years previous, will be able to receive pensions without dropping from active service.

UNITED PRESBYTERIANS SEE EVENTUAL UNION.

DES MOINES, Iowa, May 31.—(AP)—A breach which has separated two members of the family of Presbyterian churches since Civil War times may be closed through the contemplated merger of nine denominations.

With the United Presbyterian Church of North America as mediator, churchmen say that the Northern Presbyterian church and the Southern Presbyterian church are being brought to a common ground preparatory to uniting with other groups and with each other.

Where the misunderstandings of the Civil War still seem to prevent the northern and southern denominations from merging both have indicated that they are ready to unite with the United Presbyterian church, according to delegates to the assembly of the latter denomination now in session here.

By vote today the assembly approved of efforts which its representatives of an interdenominational committee have made to bring about Presbyterian unity and provided that the work shall continue. The question must go to the various presbyteries before being returned to the assembly for final action.

Unification of the Presbyterian Church of the U. S. A., the United Presbyterian Church of North America, the Northern, the Southern and several Reformed Presbyterian churches, of which the Dutch and German are the largest, is contemplated in the plan approved.

known as Greater Atlanta. I fought for the measure and it was largely through my efforts, coupled with the work of my colleagues, that the paper was passed, making Atlanta one of the largest cities in the country.

"As a business administrator, I won the esteem of my colleagues in the assembly from all sections of the state, and I have their confidence and loyal support in local matters as well as those affecting the state at large.

H. J. PENN.

Popular Election of Judges.

"I will urge and support the popular election of municipal court judges and judges of the juvenile court, believing that system will be democratic and fair to one and all the people.

"I favor a plan of civil service examinations for those seeking employment in Fulton county, whose positions require intelligence and skill, believing that the more securely public service is divorced from personal and factional politics the better the public business will be operated.

"This race is predicated solely on my record for past performances and of what I have announced that I will seek to do. I solicit the support and vote of all those interested in humanitarianism and the social agencies which I have so devotedly sought to protect and perserve. I shall remain the servant of the people of Fulton county and seek to protect all interest seeking special privileges for none."

Jones' Announcement.

Text of Mr. Jones' announcement follows:

"To the Democratic Voters of Fulton county, Georgia.

"Having filed my pledge and paid the entrance fee as required by the rules of the party, I hereby announce myself as a candidate for the State Legislature from Fulton county, for the office held by Miss Bessie Kempton, subject to the rules of the white primary.

"I am an attorney by profession, having practiced law in Georgia since my admission on October 14th, 1914, at Augusta, until I located here on March 4th, 1928.

"I own my home and reside at 206 Elizabeth street, N. E.

"I am a member of Wesley Memorial Methodist church and Sunday school.

"In the near future I shall be pleased to announce my platform.

retary of the democratic executive committee, follows:

"Upon consideration, I have decided to have my name withdrawn as a candidate for councilman in the ninth ward, and I authorize you to so notify the chairman of the city democratic executive committee on my behalf.

"Upon due consideration I have come to the conclusion that the interest of the ward will be best served by the reelection of Mr. Carpenter, the incumbent. Mr. Carpenter is now serving an unexpired term and has rendered some valuable services to the ward and the city as a whole on several important committees, and I feel that it would be detrimental both to the ward and the city to make a change in the representation at this time. You are authorized to notify Mr. Carpenter of my decision, and if you deem it proper, to publish the letter."

Statement by Penn.

H. J. Penn, opposing James W. Maddox, veteran member of the board of education from the fifth ward, Saturday issued the following statement regarding his candidacy:

"I wish to announce to my friends all over Atlanta, and especially in the fifth ward, that I am a candidate for the board of education from the fifth ward in the coming primary and will appreciate their vote and influence.

"If elected I pledge my very best service to the school department, and will endeavor to reduce the expense of maintaining the schools. I am of the opinion that our schools could be operated full time within the appropriation if more economy was practiced.

"I have been a resident of Atlanta for 29 years and of the fifth ward 18 years, and have been connected with the American Can Company for 29 years."

Layfield's Platform.

Zack Layfield, opposed by J. T. Marler and J. O. Aldredge for the councilmanic position in the seventh ward to succeed Councilman Wiley L. Moore, Saturday issued a platform on which he will predicate his race.

"I believe property values in the western section of the borough will be enhanced by construction of better roads and paved streets, and I will fight for such improvements," Mr. Layfield said.

"I am making this race as a free lance and am not attempting to ride into office on anyone's coat-tail.

"We have no adequate building in the seventh ward to house the highly treasured works of Joel Chandler Harris, beloved southern author, and the branch Carnegie library. I pledge myself to try in every way possible to have an adequate building erected in the vicinity of the Wren's Nest and Howell park for this wonderful library.

"The little tots over in the southwest section of the ward should no longer be compelled to walk eight or ten blocks over dangerous street crossings to school. I will do my best to get sufficient appropriation made for establishment of a grammar school in the Cascade-Beecher neighborhood—one of the fastest-growing sections of Atlanta.

"I am advocating and will try to bring about a change in the way the business affairs of the city in general are handled. While the people can have the type of government they want, I am of the opinion we need a change. I know business when I see it, and if the present method is business, I am a bankrupt.

"I favor a certainty of schools and no more ballahoo about their closing."

Other avowed contenders for the other two posts include Jesse B. Simmons, George A. Eckford and Jo Johnson, seeking the position which Miss Bessie Kempton has announced she will vacate, and Virgil Adams and Swift Tyler, seeking the post now occupied by Dr. George Brown.

It was reported Saturday that Dr. Brown would be a candidate for renomination, but when reached, he declared he had not yet fully decided whether he will offer again.

SLATON TO MAKE DECISION MONDAY

bents, who have either paid their entrance fees or definitely stated that they would do so before the closing of the lists on June 3, are as follows:

For governor: George H. Carswell, John N. Holder, James A. Perry, E. Rivers and Richard B. Russell, Jr.

For secretary of agriculture: J. J. Brown, Eugene Talmadge, Joe Davidson.

For superintendent of schools: M. D. Collins, M. L. Duggan.

For public service commissioner: Perry T. Knight, Guy Stone.

State officials who have announced they will stand for re-election and who so far have no opposition are:

Associate justices of the supreme court: S. Price Gilbert, Samuel C. Atkinson.

Associate judges of the court of appeals: Nash R. Broyles, W. F. Jenkins.

State treasurer, N. J. Speer.

Mrs. Bessie Anderson, secretary of the state democratic executive committee, said Saturday that she would remain at her desk in the office of the state tax commission until noon Tuesday, the last day for the qualification of candidates and a legal holiday observed by the closing of all state house offices.

Chapman Withdraws.

In withdrawing from the governor's race Gordon S. Chapman, in a statement made public Saturday said that as several other candidates have adopted a number of planks in their platforms which he advocated, "I will have succeeded in what I started out to achieve when I announced for governor." Mr. Chapman in his announcement advocated abolition of advalorem taxes on farm property, a bond issue for roadbuilding, consolidation of state offices, increased pensions for Confederate soldiers, and better educational facilities.

"In my opinion there will certainly be a second primary election," he said. "The expense of waging two campaigns will far exceed the salary of the office. I therefore have definitely decided to withdraw my name as a candidate in order not to muddy the waters, so to speak, and perhaps defeat the candidate who will bring about the desired reforms as I see them.

"To the thousands of my friends throughout the state who have pledged me their support, I express my sincere thanks, and release them from their obligation to vote as they deem best. My only desire is to see the best equipped man elected to this important post."

URQUHART SEEKING JUDGESHIP AT MACON.

MACON, Ga., May 31.—(AP)—Entry of Julian Urquhart, of this city, in every county in the Macon circuit, to oppose Judge Malcolm D. Jones for the judgeship of superior court, and the development of a field of seven prospective candidates for the legislature from Bibb county featured today's political news.

Judge H. A. Mathews, of Fort Valley, probably will be unopposed for the judgeship of the same circuit, there being two judges.

Mr. Urquhart's entry in opposition to Judge Jones came as a surprise to local politicians.

Although no one has paid entrance fees for prospective legislative candidates and no one had formally announced, it appeared certain, according to the Telegraph, that friends of Orville A. Park and Kyle T. Alfriend would place them in the race. J. L. Bailey, professor of economics at Mercer University, also loomed as a probable candidate.

W. O. Cooper and L. T. (Pat) Gillen, present members of the lower house, are "undecided" as to whether they will seek re-election. Emmett Jackson and Douglas Carlisle, also mentioned for the place, had not made up their minds.

Judge Hugh Chambers and Harry Nottingham have paid their entrance fees as candidates for the municipal court judgeship. Congressman Rutherford is the only other person who has qualified with Chris Sheridan, treasurer of the local democratic committee.

DORSEY DAVIS OFFERS FOR ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATHENS, Ga., May 31.—(Special.)—Colonel Dorsey Davis, a prominent attorney of Athens and a well known member of the bar of northeast Georgia, today announced his candidacy for attorney general of Georgia in the democratic primary to be held on September 10, next. He states that if elected he will devote his entire time to the office, the duties of which "are prescribed by law and do not call for a 'platform'."

Colonel Davis has practiced law for 20 years, the last ten years having been spent in Athens.

He was born in Banks county and when he was about one year old his parents moved to a farm in Franklin county near Lavonia. He attended the community schools and finished high school at Lavonia. He taught two years in Franklin county and then entered Mercer University at Macon, where he graduated in law in 1909. He practiced law at Lavonia until 1920 when he moved to Athens, where he has since lived.

Colonel Davis has just completed a term as grand master of the grand lodge of Odd Fellows in Georgia, in which order he has taken an active interest for a number of years.

The announcement of Colonel Davis follows:

To the citizens of Georgia:

I am a candidate for attorney general of Georgia, subject to the rules and regulations of the democratic primary to be held on September 10.

I deem it unnecessary to go into a lengthy discussion of the duties of the office. The code of Georgia prescribes the duties of the attorney general.

If elected to this office I promise you that I will do my duty. I will give my entire time to the work of this important office and to the service of the state. I have been engaged in the general practice of the law in the state for 20 years, and I confidently refer the voters of the state, to the bar and to those who know me, as to my ability and my qualifications.

I will appreciate the vote and support of every citizen of the state.

Respectfully,
DORSEY DAVIS.

RIVERS' ENTRANCE FEE TO BE PAID MONDAY

LAKELAND, Ga., May 31.—(Special.)—C. C. Brantley, editor of the Valdosta Times, chairman of the Rivers-for-governor pre-campaign committee, announced today that Senator E. D. Rivers would file his formal entry in the governor's race and pay his entrance fee to the proper authorities Monday, June 2, and would actually begin campaigning on Saturday, June 7.

The opening campaign speech will be made at Lakeland, the home town of Senator Rivers, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon of that date, at which time a gala event is scheduled to take place, including band music, speeches by several outstanding supporters of Senator Rivers and an open house reception at his "Log Cabin" home.

Among those to be included on the program are Judge W. R. Smith, Hon. Roy V. Harris and Hon. E. B. Dykes.

A petition signed by practically every citizen of Lanier county was presented to Mr. Brantley urging the retention of Senator Rivers' campaign headquarters at Lakeland throughout the campaign and volunteering the services of the signers to work in the campaign headquarters if they were established here. A sizable campaign headquarters is already in operation here and has been since January 1, five stenographers having been constantly at work for the past five months.

RAMSPECK ANNOUNCES TO SUCCEED HIMSELF

Says He Has Earnestly Endeavored To Protect Constituents.

Washington, May 31.—(Special.)—Enumerating some of the matters with which he has acquired familiarity and pressed for legislative action, Representative Robert Ramspeck issued a statement here today announcing his candidacy for renomination and re-election as the fifth district member of the lower house.

Mr. Ramspeck has served six months in congress as the successor to the late Congressman Leslie J. Steele. During the short time he has been in Washington he has made numerous friends and established himself strongly in the esteem of his colleagues. Few new members have gained a wider influence in such a short time.

His full announcement follows:

"To the people of the fifth district:

"It is my ambition to again represent the fifth district of Georgia in the congress and I have therefore qualified as a candidate, subject to the democratic primary to be held September 10.

"In the short time that I have been privileged to serve the district I have made every effort to become familiar with pending legislation and have given prompt attention to all requests coming to me from citizens of the district. Particular attention has been given to matters relating specifically to the district, such as the Atlanta postoffice, the survey of the Chattahoochee river, the proper status for Atlanta in the census, the erection of a soldiers' home in the south and various other matters of a more general nature.

"To those familiar with congress it is not necessary to explain that a position of power and influence in the house can only be attained through long service. The speaker is serving his thirteenth term; the majority leader is serving his tenth and the minority leader his fourteenth. The chairmen of practically all committees have seen long service in the house. There is perhaps no other public service where experience counts for so much as it does in the lower house of congress.

"My experience in Washington with a former congressman has helped me to more quickly become familiar with the routine and my acquaintance with many of the older members has been of much value to me and has enabled me to render more efficient service than I could have done without this former experience. By virtue of this acquaintance and the splendid assistance of the Georgia member of the ways and means committee, I was able to secure the same committee appointments enjoyed by the late Congressman Steele in spite of the fact that the democratic membership of each committee was reduced by one, in this congress, on account of the large majority held by the republicans.

"These matters are mentioned because all a candidate for congress has to offer is the ability to serve his district and the willingness to be faithful to his duties.

"If the people of the fifth district will honor me by re-electing me to a full term, I promise to them a faithful devotion to the duties of the position. ROBERT RAMSPECK."

BRANHAM CONSIDERING RACE FOR GOVERNOR

Fort Valley Citizen Being Urged To Offer by His Friends.

FORT VALLEY, Ga., May 31.—(Special.)—There has been great pressure brought to bear on Judge W. Russell Branham, of this city, to enter the gubernatorial race. The Branham family has been for nearly a century prominent in the intellectual and moral advancement of Georgia.

While Judge Branham, who is 50 years of age, has not played a conspicuous part in state politics he is recognized as a man of sterling character and an astute interpreter of the law.

Judge Branham has stated that if he decides to make the race the main plank of his platform will be a change in the law permitting the right of suffrage to be based upon the payment of poll and not property tax.

He will also insist upon the abolition of unnecessary departments in the state government.

Judge Branham is a nephew of Judge Henry A. Mathews, senior judge of the superior court of the Macon circuit which is composed of Bibb, Peach, Houston and Crawford counties.

NEW CHEST OFFICIALS PRAISED BY CHAMBER

Organization of Council of Social Workers Is Now Under Way.

Adoption by the board of directors of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce of resolutions expressing faith in the effectiveness and human service of the Community Chest and its 39 agencies, and pledging support of business leaders to the new administration as represented by E. A. Thornwell, newly elected president, was one of two developments in progress of Atlanta's program of social service as outlined Saturday by Chest officials.

The other was a plan undertaken for organization of a council of social workers, to embrace representatives of societies connected with the Chest as well as all other social work activities in Atlanta, such as hospitals, social settlements, and public institutions.

A committee of social service executives has undertaken to develop the plan, its officers being E. M. Kahn, executive secretary of the Association of Jewish charities, chairman; Miss Ada S. Woolfolk, executive of the Family Welfare Society, vice chairman, and Frank Miller, executive director of the Community Chest, secretary.

Seeking to rally to the central objective of human helpfulness all the available forces in the community, a council of the sort as planned was described in the announcement as valuable in developing team work among the social service agencies of city and county, and planning and executing effectively the social service program of the whole. It is usually divided, Mr. Miller explained, into several groups, which study the various divisions of the welfare program, such as family service, child care, health, character training, and recreational activities.

Six Georgia Boys Graduate At West Point This Month

BY HARRIS P. SCOTT.

Six cadets accredited to the state of Georgia who have been attending the United States Military Academy for the past four years will be graduated on June 12 and commissioned second lieutenants in the United States army. They are Harry C. Anderson, Carl A. Brandt, Christian H. Clarke, Daniel A. Cooper, James J. Heriot and Jack G. Pitcher.

Georgia has been sending cadets to West Point ever since 1813, when the first two from the state, Robert M. Forsythe and Robert W. Pooler, were admitted. Sixteen other cadets are at present attending the military academy from Georgia. There are two hundred and forty-three cadets in this year's graduating class representing every state in the Union save Arizona, Delaware, New Mexico and Wyoming. Siam and the Philippines have representatives in the class. Except for the foreigners, there being two from Siam, all graduates will receive commissions as officers in the army. The Philippine cadet will go into the constabulary of the islands, but it is a branch of Uncle Sam's army just the same.

The 1930 class of the military academy will be graduated on Thursday morning, June 12, with exercises at the base of the Battle monument on Trophy Point. There, the secretary of war or some high ranking dignitary of the war department will present diplomas to the graduates.

Cadet Sergeant Harry C. Anderson is 24 years old and is the son of Mrs. Ellen M. Anderson, of 506 East Waldburg street, Savannah. He entered the military academy in 1926, being appointed from the ranks of the United States army, where he served in the 22d infantry for a little more than a year. Before entering West Point Anderson also attended the United States Coast Guard Academy at New London, Conn., and he spent four years in Savannah High school. He has made application for appointment in the infantry branch of the service upon his graduation. Anderson expects to spend his graduation leave at his home in Savannah.

Cadet Carl A. Brandt, of Fort Benning, is 24 years old and also was appointed from the army. Brandt's father is Lieutenant Colonel A. Brandt, of the 29th United States infantry, now on duty at Fort Benning. Young Brandt lived at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., where his father was stationed when the boy was appointed to the military academy in 1926 and was serving as a private in the air service detachment at that station. When he leaves here at his graduation he will spend his leave with his parents at Fort Benning and has made application for appointment in the cavalry branch of the service with an air corps detail. Cadet Brandt has been active in athletics while at West Point, having been a member of the soccer and track squads. He plays No. 1 on Army's polo quartet and has won a minor "A" in sports. Brandt is a cadet-sergeant in the corps organization.

Captain Christian H. Clarke is 23 years old and lives at 1251 Peachtree street, Atlanta, where his father, Christian H. Clarke, Sr., also resides. Clarke was appointed to West Point from the fifth congressional district of Georgia by Representative William D. Upshaw and entered the military academy in July, 1926. Young Clarke attended Technological High school in Atlanta for three years, being in the class of 1922. He was in the 1926 class at the University of Georgia, where he spent three years, and while at the university was a member of its reserve officers' training corps and also belonged to the Georgia national guard. In the R. O. T. C. young Clarke served as a lieutenant of cavalry. In the guard he was a private in Troop C, 104th cavalry. Upon his graduation Clarke has applied for detail in the cavalry branch of the army. His graduation leave will be spent traveling in Europe. He holds the rank of cadet-sergeant in the corps.

Cadet Daniel A. Cooper was born November 13, 1906, and is the son of Lieutenant Colonel H. M. Cooper, United States army. At the time of his appointment to West Point in 1926 Cadet Cooper was living in Washington, D. C., although he is accredited to the 12th congressional district of Georgia, having received his appointment to the military academy from William Larsen, representative in congress from that district. Before entering West Point young Cooper attended Western High school in Washington and Leavenworth High school in Leavenworth, Kan. His home address is given as Eastman, Ga. Cadet Cooper had some previous military training, having attended a civilian military training camp in 1924 at Camp Meade, Maryland, and also at Monmouth, N. J., at the Army Signal school. He has applied for appointment in the infantry branch of the service and expects to spend a part of his leave in Boston, Mass., and the balance of it in South America. He is a cadet-sergeant.

Other than his regular army service, Pitcher was a member of the 122nd Infantry, Georgia National Guard. At West Point he was on the cadet rifle team. Upon graduation Cadet Pitcher will apply for service in the infantry branch. He holds the rank of cadet-sergeant. Cadet Pitcher will go to Southport, N. C., for his graduation leave.

Buckhead Theater To Open Monday Afternoon at 1:30

New Movie House Is Designed Especially for Sound Pictures.

Representing an investment of $250,000, the Buckhead theater will open its doors to the public tomorrow afternoon at 1:30, giving that community its first theater and adding to Greater Atlanta the second house built especially for sound pictures.

More than once theater operating groups have looked with favor on Buckhead as a promising center for a distinctive motion picture theater but it remained for citizens of Buckhead to launch and carry through actual plans for such an enterprise. All details for the building were completed many months ago and work has gone forward steadily during the past six months.

Located on Roswell road at the intersection of Peachtree, the Buckhead theater is in the heart of the thriving community for which it is named. The building which fronts 100 feet on Roswell road and runs back for a depth of more than 100 feet, includes besides a 1,056-seat theater, four stores, two flanking the lobby on each side, and several suites of offices on the second floor, as well as attractive quarters designed especially for a restaurant, with a roof garden of generous proportions.

The building is of Spanish design carried out effectively with wrought iron grills and decorative friezes. Steel, concrete, hollow tile, brick and stone were employed in construction. The contractor was George Spruell.

A deep lobby 20 feet in width leads to the foyer which opens on luxuriously appointed lounge rooms on each side, where the floors are covered with a rich carpet woven especially for the theater. The carpeting throughout the theater is padded with half-inch ozite at once producing an effect of luxuriousness and insuring perfect sound reception.

The auditorium has exceptionally pleasing proportions giving both a depth and width favoring talking screen presentations. A Balustrade rises just back of the last row of seats in the center tier forming an attractive archway that is draped in velours of Burgundy red.

Seats are arranged in three tiers giving on four wide aisles—two main aisles and two along-side the walls. The side tiers have wide cross-over leading to large exit doors.

In decoration and design the auditorium holds to Spanish type. The high wainscoting is of travatine finish. The side walls are paneled with macoustic plaster finished in a symphony of reds. The ornamental frieze presents a background of Della Robio blue on which figures are executed in red, gold and royal blue. The ceiling is finished in macoustic plaster tinted neutral green.

The aisles are heavily carpeted in a specially woven conventional design embracing four colors which predominate in the decorative scheme.

The large stage, measuring 25 feet wide and 20 feet deep, is fully equipped. All the paraphernalia of a regular road show theater has been installed—border lights, footlights, a three-way dimmer, olivettes, spotlights, stage rigging and completely equipped dressing rooms.

The grand draperies of Burgundy colored velours decorated in heavy gold applique and fringed with gold adhere to the general scheme. The stage curtain is of brocaded metaline trimmed with appliqued velours. Immediately in front of the picture screen is a traveler of neutral green velvet. The one painted set is a woodland scene executed by the Atlanta Scenic Company, which also is responsible for all the stage curtains. Draperies, rugs and furnishings are by Duffee-Freeman Company.

Further insuring perfect sound reception, the chairs are upholstered in velours, seat and back. They were manufactured and installed by the American Seating Company.

The balcony seats 256 and is similarly equipped as to carpets and seats. It may be entered directly or through the auditorium. The booth is equipped with the latest type Super-Simplex projectors to which the sound equipment is attached.

The women's rest room is located at the right of the auditorium entrance. It is thoroughly equipped and tastefully appointed. The men's smoker occupies a corresponding position on the opposite side.

The deep lobby is effectively treated with four large triple display frames handsomely decorated and brilliantly treated. The central portion is fitted with Florentine mirrors surmounted by bracket lights, on each side of which are frames for pictorial displays.

Two exceptionally handsome three-sheet frames, also especially designed and executed by National Theater Supply Company, flank the entrance on each side.

The box office carries out the same general architectural design and decorative scheme employed in the theater.

As a special compliment to Buckhead and to the legend which gave the community its name, the theater features a buck's head in the Neon electric sign which adorns the marquee. Likewise, two remarkably fine specimens have been mounted and hung in the foyer. These latter are the gift of friends in Canada who presented them to the Buckhead theater.

The legend goes that in the early days of Atlanta when deer roamed through the wooded area that now is Buckhead, huntsmen came from near and far to stalk deer. One particularly ardent sportsman who brought down a huge buck was so proud of his quarry that he mounted the head on a post at the very spot where the Buckhead theater stands. That gave Buckhead its name.

The theater was built by the Southeastern Land Company, whose officers and directors are Atlanta people, most of them citizens of Buckhead. It was financed entirely by local capital and is under the management of Willis J. Davis, who is well and favorably known in Atlanta through active leadership in theater enterprises.

Officers and directors of the building company include the following: Dr. C. M. Adams, president; Mrs. J. S. Donaldson, vice president; E. O. Hildebrant, secretary; W. R. Brandt, treasurer; George H. Lowerre and Mrs. Fannie M. Lorre, directors.

The operating company is headed by Willis J. Davis, president; Dr. Malcolm E. Turner, secretary, and W. C. Coart, treasurer.

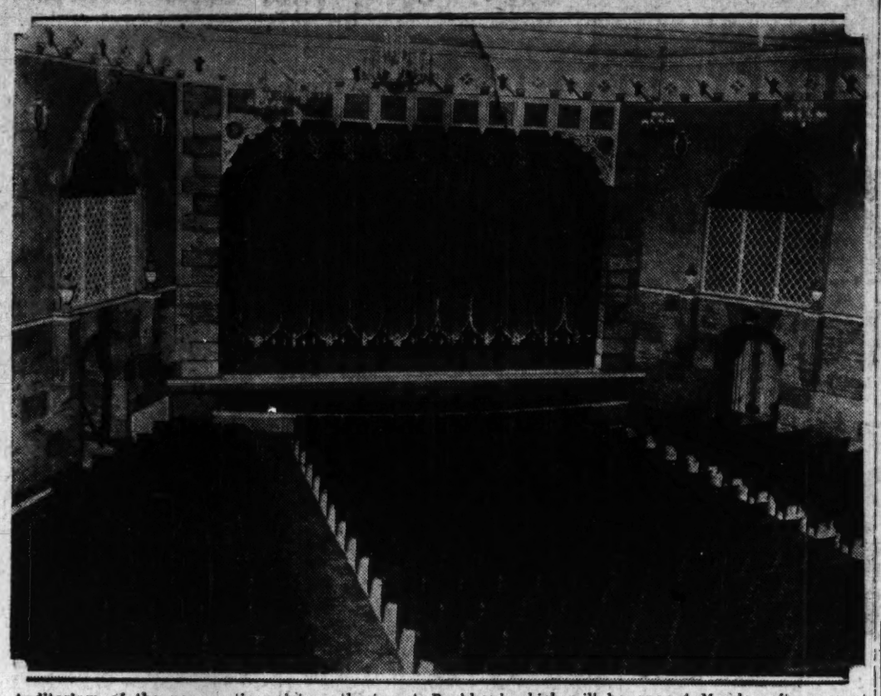

Architects and engineers combined talents to produce in the Buckhead theater not only a beautiful house but one with perfect acoustics. To that end the architects, Daniell & Beutell, were in frequent consultation with engineers of the United States Gypsum Company, who handled the acoustical problems. Experts pronounce the result a complete success.

One of the most notable pictures of the season, the Warner Brothers-Vitaphone all-color, dancing, singing and talking hit, "Gold Diggers of Broadway," featuring Nick Lucas, Winnie Lightner, Conway Tearle, Albert Gran, Nancy Welford, William Bakewell and Ann Pennington, will be the opening attraction.

In addition to the feature picture the program contains the riotously funny talking comedy, "Fatal Forceps," starring Ford Sterling; and, naturally enough, it presents also that popular Universal Sound News with Graham McNamee as the talking reporter.

The inaugural program will present the whole show on the screen, with the greetings of the management conveyed in a few brief words thrown on the screen—and with no formal speeches.

Interior of New Buckhead Theater

Auditorium of the new motion picture theater at Buckhead which will be opened Monday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock. The theater is the second in Atlanta which has been erected under special specifications for the reproduction of sound pictures. It represents an expenditure of $250,000 and is unusually attractive in appearance, being Spanish in design. The auditorium seats 1,056 and the stage is 25 feet wide. Elaborate decorations and furnishings are used throughout, the grand draperies being Burgundy colored velours with heavy gold applique and fringe. Daniell & Beutell were the architects.

Glenn Memorial Church Erection Will Begin Soon

Plans for the new Emory University church, to be a memorial to the late Rev. Wilbur Fiske Glenn, have been accepted and bids for the construction are being received, it was announced Saturday. The quarter-million dollar church and auditorium probably will be well under way by the time the students return to class in the fall.

Although the plant will be primarily a Methodist institution, it also will be a part of the university and will be available for concerts and other university functions.

Friends and members of the Glenn family have made the memorial possible. Thomas K. Glenn, chairman of the board of the First National bank, and Mrs. Charles Howard Candler, son and daughter, respectively, of the distinguished clergyman, gave $50,000 and $75,000.

The architecture of the memorial will harmonize with that of the other campus buildings, with the addition of a tower in which will be a set of chimes. The site of the auditorium and church will be near the Emory five points, bordering the campus and facing North Decatur road.

A large pipe organ is mounted on a portable console which can be removed from sight when the whole stage and orchestra are needed for student productions. The building will be arranged so that outdoor exercises also can be held conveniently.

The plant is regarded as one of the most up-to-date in the country. Operating on a highly efficient basis, the organization specializes on all modern laundry services and has shown a consistent growth each year.

NEW IRON FIREMAN MODELS TO BE SHOWN

Factory Officials Will Attend District Convention in Atlanta.

Advanced models of the Iron Fireman, automatic coal burner, will be on display at the Piedmont hotel Tuesday and Wednesday following a convention Monday of the company's representatives in this district.

The convention and display will be attended by approximately 100 dealers of the company in this territory, which covers Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee and Mississippi.

Factory officials who will come here from Portland, Oregon, to attend the meeting include E. C. Sammons, executive vice president; C. T. Burg, general sales manager; Captain W. H. Gray, chief engineer and treasurer, and J. A. Thorson, division sales manager. In addition there will be Joseph Gerber, of Gerber & Crosley, advertising agents of the company, and also the district representatives and district engineers.

The company is represented in Atlanta by the Automatic Coal Burning Corporation, 397 Peachtree street, of which J. T. Baxter is president. With representation in Atlanta for two years, installations have been made in the Atlanta Trust Company building, new city hall, Western Union building, 24 city schools and many apartments, hotels, industrial and manufacturing plants and residences.

Iron Fireman supplies automatic coal heat, providing smokeless equipment. The company is seven years old, and the statement of January 1, 1930, showed an increase in earnings of 1,540 per cent. The stock is listed on the Chicago exchange and has been exceedingly active during the past 10 days, according to S. C. May, district representative, which he attributes to the showing of the new advanced models throughout the country.

Invitations have been sent by the company to 500 Atlantans, including city officials, members of the school board, real estate men, builders, architects and business leaders. The exhibit will be open from noon until 10 p. m. Tuesday and Wednesday. A series of exhibits similar to the one here will also be held this month in Portland, Denver, St. Louis, Chicago, New York and Cleveland.

Member Drive Opened by Local Junior Chamber

The spring membership drive of the Junior Chamber of Commerce, under direction of Dr. Rayford W. Tharpe, chairman of the membership committee, was launched auspiciously last week and will continue through June 5, George B. Yancey, secretary, announced Saturday.

Some of the exceptional opportunities which the young men of the city between the ages of 18 and 35 are offered through membership in the Jaycees, Mr. Yancey points out, are civic work, such as committees on thrift, safety, smoke nuisance, aviation, legal aid and good roads—committees which are active throughout the year.

There are also, he explained, educational classes in public speaking, personality, salesmanship, parliamentary law, commercial law, study of Atlanta and Georgia and industrial tours, with competent instructors in charge, without cost.

Smokers of the Jaycees are given during the year. There are picnics for members and their friends. There are also summer outings and sporting events, including the spring and fall golf tournaments and the bowling league activity.

The spring membership drive is planned to bring more young men in contact with each other and give to Atlanta the precedent which they have always had at the national convention meetings in the one to be held this year in Brooklyn, N. Y., from June 11-14.

First Christian Church To Give Pageant Today

The First Christian church Sunday school will observe today as "Children's Day" with a pageant, "The World Children for Jesus," scheduled to be presented by members of the Sunday school. Mrs. J. M. Alsobrook, superintendent of the Sunday school, will direct the pageant, and a special offering will be taken. There will be no evening services at the church, it was announced, the congregation uniting with others of Decatur at the Agnes Scott chapel to hear Dr. Daniel A. Poling, noted religious leader.

NEW DRIVE IS PLANNED AGAINST LOAN SHARKS

Body for Prevention of Moral Usury To Put on "Clean-Up" Campaign.

Declaring that its purpose is "to put on a clean-up drive" with the assistance of a subsidized legal aid service in its fight on loan sharks, the Atlanta Association for the Prevention of Moral Usury, through its president, C. A. Vandiver, Saturday announced its determination to "eliminate loan sharkery and work for the improvement of small loan conditions."

At the first meeting of the board of directors, held recently, the following officers were elected, in addition to Mr. Vandiver: George M. Gentry, first vice president; E. C. Becker, second vice president; R. M. Snead, secretary-treasurer, and J. L. R. Boyd, general counsel. These officers, it was voted, are to constitute an executive committee, the purpose of which will be "to set the association into complete operation."

A resolution was introduced requesting Solicitor-General John A. Boykin to file an injunction suit directed at certain "salary-buying" companies on the allegation that such concerns are "public nuisances," and that John McClelland, solicitor of the city court, be given thanks of the association "for his interest in prosecution of usury cases pending in the city of Atlanta."

"The purpose of this association," the constitution sets forth, "shall be that of protecting the poorest people from moral usury by encouraging remedial legislation and aiding in enforcement of the laws regulating the lending of money or its equivalent."

The association is sponsored by the Atlanta Junior Chamber of Commerce, R. J. Reynolds, Jr., and V. K. Meador, being members of the association's directorate.

Chattanooga Rotary To Motor to Atlanta

As a return courtesy of the Atlanta motorcade which journeyed to Chattanooga several months ago in celebration of the completion of the paved highway across Georgia from the Tennessee city to the Florida line, the entire Chattanooga Rotary Club, accompanied by members' wives, will arrive here Tuesday to be guests for the day of the Atlanta Rotarians.

The Chattanooga club will be headed by George H. Patten, president, and it is probable that Governor Horton of Tennessee may make the trip, he advised local club heads. A delegation of Atlanta Rotarians will meet the visitor at Marietta and escort them to the Henry Grady hotel and later to the Capital City Club where luncheon will be served at 12:30 o'clock.

Constitution Prize Campaign Comes to Close in Big Rush

Ballot Box Placed in Vault in Charge of Ernst & Ernst To Be Opened Monday.

In a final desperate effort to obtain supremacy in The Atlanta Constitution's $25,000 prize campaign, candidates worked feverishly all day Saturday to gain as many credits as possible before the termination of the campaign at 9 o'clock last night. All day long candidates reported at campaign headquarters to turn in their final subscriptions, the majority, however, waiting until the last hour to obtain every possible credit.

Now comes days of tense waiting for announcement of the winners days, which for candidates, probably will be harder than all their work for subscriptions and credits since the campaign opened March 9. But winners of the automobiles, gold awards, radio sets and cash commissions listed as prizes in the big prize campaign will not be determined until every credit has been checked by representatives of Ernst & Ernst, public accountants, who have charge of auditing the entire returns in the campaign.

Subscriptions turned in by candidates are subject to verification and it will be days before the verification of the subscriptions can be completed. Candidates will be notified by mail of any subscriptions not acceptable and they will be given the opportunity to make any of these good and many candidates have already stated that they are going to make every one of these subscriptions good which are not accepted as they want every possible credit. The final rules state that subscriptions turned in and not acceptable must be made good before the candidate will receive his reward.

A locked and sealed ballot box was used Saturday into which the candidates calling at campaign headquarters deposited their final subscriptions and has been placed in a vault and will not be opened until Monday. The ballot box is in charge of Ernst & Ernst, public accountants, who will audit the returns. Candidates residing in outlying districts had until 9 o'clock Saturday night to mail their subscriptions and these will be accepted up to 6 p. m. Wednesday and turned over to the auditors.

The conclusion of the campaign climaxed a battle for credits which grew more tense through each of the closing days, and candidates from all sections worked courageously for winning places. Not until the closing hour did any of them relax the strenuous effort which kept them at top speed all day. The last day's returns will no doubt be by far the greatest of any one day in the campaign.

The official result to be announced in The Constitution will include the total credit of each candidate as checked by the auditors. At this time it cannot be stated just when the winners will be announced as it will be some days before the verification of subscriptions are completed and the audit made of the returns.

Lakewood Park Ready for Busy 5-Week Period

Lakewood Park is looking forward to what probably will be the most active five weeks in the history of the local amusement resort, Manager Oscar Mills announced Saturday.

On listing the events which already are scheduled for the park up to and including July 6, the manager reported that on Saturday, June 7, the annual lawyers' barbecue would take place, that on June 9 the annual negro outing of the Atlanta Charity Festival Association is slated, Friday the 13th is reserved for a surprise feature; Saturday, June 21, for two outstanding annual picnics, while the July 4-5-6 week-end will feature the annual Independence Day auto races and outboard motorboat events.

What is expected to be one of the largest crowds ever gathered at Lakewood will attend the Stone Baking Company's picnic for the children of Atlanta and vicinity on Wednesday, June 25, when 50,000 cakes will be given away, free coffee and drinks will be served, a housewife's grand prize given and children will be privileged to ride on the amusement devices at the lowest price ever offered at the park.

The annual outing of F. J. Paxon's Bible Class No. 2 of the Second Baptist church and Mrs. F. J. Paxon's Business Women's League section will be held on June 21.

On July 4 the eighth annual Lakewood auto races with the fifth renewal of the Dixie motor derby, are scheduled. This event attracted 22,000 people in 1929. On July 5 the second annual outboard motorboat races qualifying races are slated, with the finals to be run on July 6.

Meanwhile the three-night-a-week dances by Rudy Mincey and his Lakewood orchestra on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday are drawing increased attendance and the Dixie String Band's Wednesday night square dances are proving as popular as ever.

The health pageant of the Fulton county schools last Tuesday drew out the largest crowd of the year so far as the events in which more than 1,000 school children participated.

C. K. Ayer, Loan Head, Returns From Confab

C. K. Ayer, of Joshua L. Baily & Co., and president of Beneficial Loan Society, of Atlanta, returned recently from New York, where he attended the annual two-day conference of the presidents of 100 subsidiary companies of the Beneficial Industrial Loan Corporation.

Mr. Ayer, stated that the officers of the parent company, in reviewing the corporation's growth and development since May 5, 1929, when four groups of personal finance offices were merged into the Beneficial Industrial Loan Corporation, reported a total volume of over $58,000,000 of personal finance business transacted last year through the corporation's offices in 21 leading industrial states.

"The volume of business for the first quarter of 1930 shows a gain of 10 per cent over the same period for 1929," Mr. Ayer added, "and the Atlanta office, under the management of William T. Fisher, also reported a satisfactory growth in business."

Atlanta Bird Lovers Will Hear Dr. Rogers

An illustrated lecture by Dr. Wallace Rogers, one of the most expert bird photographers in the state, will be the principal feature of the next meeting of the Atlanta Bird Club, which will be held in the Chamber of Commerce building Tuesday night at 7:30 o'clock. The question of a new clubhouse or tract of land for a bird refuge will also be discussed during the meeting, as well as that of the projected legislation known as the "Bald Eagle Act," framed with a view to giving protection to that bird.

Secretaries Club Will Hear Sutton

"Salesmanship as applied to executive secretarial work" will be the subject of the address Willis A. The meeting was postponed from May 26.

Brown, vice president, and Fred Shaefer, secretary.

Atlanta Ranks 15th in Country In Suicide Ratio

Sixty-three persons, or 24.7 for every 100,000 population of Atlanta, took their own lives during 1929, according to a national survey just made public by Frederick L. Hoffman, consulting statistician of the Prudential Life Insurance Company of America, as published in the May issue of The Spectator.

The figures for this city were based on the government census of 1920, which gave Atlanta a total of 255,100 population, and represented an increase of 22 persons killing themselves last year, as compared to suicides here in 1928 when the ratio was only 16.1 per 100,000 population.

The percentage of suicides throughout the country as revealed in the survey of 151 American cities was 18 deaths per 100,000 population—the highest ratio on record since 1916. Sacramento, Cal., with 42.8 persons per 100,000 ending their own lives, was first, while the ratio in San Diego, Cal., was second, with 51.8. San Francisco rated third, with 39.3 per 100,000.

Of the 151 cities embraced in the survey, Atlanta ranked fifteenth in suicides during 1929. It tied with Memphis for this place, and in addition to the three California cities already named for first, second and third place, other cities which topped Atlanta in self-destruction statistics were as follows:

Atlantic City; Quincy, Ill.; Terre Haute, Ind.; Manhattan and Bronx; Spokane; Seattle; Concord, N. H.; Kansas City, Mo.; Cincinnati; Minneapolis, and Reading, Pa.

The national increase shown in the number of suicides, the report says, "is by no means as marked as had been expected in view of the disastrous results of the stock market collapse and the prevailing business depression during the last few months of the year."

New Telephone Exchange Names Put Into Effect

More than 8,700 Main and Madison telephone subscribers were transferred to the new $800,000 dial office at midnight Saturday and Fairfax and Franklin subscribers are becoming accustomed to the new central office names Calhoun and Belmont.

The additions and changes in Atlanta's telephone system were made quickly and quietly, without interruption to the service. Telephone officials who were present expressed themselves as pleased and pronounced the transfer a success.

The opening of the new Main dial office and the other changes in the telephone system were planned several years ago and it required a year to install the new equipment and rearrange the service.

The Main manual office which was one of the first common battery offices in the country, was discontinued at midnight. The switchboard which was the model of the Bell system 37 years ago, has been enlarged, improved and replaced to such an extent to meet modern conditions that only the framework of the original switchboard remained.

The single office which one time served all Atlanta's telephone needs, has grown into nine central offices. When the long-distance office is moved to the new telephone building in the fall the old Main building will no longer be used for operating purposes.

During the past month Main and Madison subscribers have been instructed in the use of the dial and there were a large number of calls immediately after the new system was placed in service.

A new directory containing all the changes and additions has also been delivered to subscribers and telephone officials expect the general public to soon become accustomed to the new central office names and other changes.

News From Atlanta's Public Schools

Superintendent's Message

Dear Girls and Boys:

Vacation time is almost here. I can hear your merry laughter as you think of the long summer days that you are going to spend in play. Nothing pleases me so much as for children to be happy, and I know you are happy because you are going to have the oportunity to rest from school and have the privilege of spending some time with your mother and father and other friends.

May I make a few suggestions to you about the Good Old Summer time?

First of all we must not think because school is out that all rules are suspended and that we are to forget all of the good things that we have tried to learn. We must try to keep up our health habits, to inculcate the right ideas in play and to put into practice the things that we have learned during the year. So often when school is out we seem to feel that all of the restraints of the year are gone—that it is not necessary longer to keep our hair combed, our teeth clean or to observe the proper rules of eating and sleeping, or even obey the rules of society and of good etiquette. Please see to it that the lessons that we have tried to teach are carried out through all of the year.

To the older boys and girls I would make this request—that in all of your pleasure and in all of your activities this summer you may deport yourselves as worthy students of the institution which you represent and of the school system of Atlanta. Please do not forget that you have a home to represent, and that every act of your life is saying to the world the type of mother and father who have reared you, that your every word during the summer time is telling the world the type of teacher under whose instructions you have been during the past year. You are our representatives out in the world, especially those of you who are graduating from our high schools and going into the world or college or business.

The city of Atlanta has made a considerable contribution of its money and its resources to fit and prepare you for the duties and obligations of life. A careless word, a flippant expression, an unthoughtful act may give to the world the impression that the schools have not trained you in those things that make for good citizenship and character.

This week I have had the privilege of signing the largest number of high school diplomas that Atlanta has ever delivered. In all, 1,076 senior high school diplomas have been signed. This includes our Opportunity, our night schools and our senior high schools for white and negroes. To each of you who are completing our public school course I address this message urging you to give the best that you have to the world and to the college or institution that you may attend. Freely ye have received—freely give. I look upon each of you as not only a representative of the Atlanta schools, but as my personal representative in the institution or the business which you may enter. Please give to the world the right conception of what we are trying to do to train you for the duties of citizenship.

Always your friend,
WILLIS A. SUTTON, Superintendent of Schools.

CENTRAL STAFF HAS PARTY FOR TEACHER

W. J. Scott, Central Night's Journalism instructor, was honored at a surprise party by the staff of "Modern Knight" on Monday evening, May 26.

Mr. Scott was recently appointed principal of the Bass Junior High school and will not teach at Central Night next fall. He has been on the faculty of the night school for the past eight years.

Another popular member of the faculty, J. P. Barron, was recently appointed principal of the Maddox Junior High school and will not return next fall.

Central Night's annual, a beautifully-bound volume, was distributed to all students and visitors at the graduation exercises on Thursday evening, May 29.

Burnice Hollis, salesman extraordinary, is again the winner in the ad selling campaign sponsored by Modern Knight. This is the fourth year in succession that he has won the prize.

Miss Mardrie Sorrow won the prize as the girl who sold the most ads. Both winners were presented with $2.50 gold pieces.

"Uncle Bud" Jackson's eighth grade took all honors for attendance, for the year, winning both the first half and last half of the year contests. The class was treated to a cake and ice cream party for their work.

Miss Viola Wilson's shorthand class was runner-up in the second contest and gave "Uncle Bud's" class a close race.

Central Night's graduation exercises were impressive and inspiring. Over a hundred young men and women took part. Miss Gertrude Taylor gave the salutatory and Wesley M. Jennings gave the valedictory.

As a vital and important part in the Atlanta school system, the night school has proven its worth to the hundreds of people who take advantage of its wonderful opportunities, and it will continue to grow and fill a needed place in the lives of Atlanta's citizens of the future.

BOYS' HIGH SOCIETY ELECTS NEW MEMBERS

Four new members were initiated into the Zodiac Honorary Society of Boys' High at the last meeting of the school year. The new members are: Henry Bauer, senior, and Billy Glenn. Robert Stephens and Bill Wyant, juniors. Other members are: Wink Davis, Charlie Howard, Boisfeuillet Jones, Cliff Sheffield, Booshie Turman, Charlie Ward and Randolph West.

Membership in Zodiac is the highest honor a student can obtain at Boys' High. New members are selected by a faculty committee and members of the society for leadership in scholarship and school activities. The society was organized in 1924 under the supervision of E. L. Floyd to reward individual achievement in the school.

Eight members of the Boys' High track team left for Chicago last Wednesday to participate in the national high school track meet held there Friday and Saturday. The trip was made possible by the donations from friends of the school. Those making the trip were: Carl Wesley, Charlie Ward, Charlie Howard, Gene Gatlin, Emmett Elliott, Booshie Turman, Dean Kelley, Gilbert Shahbaz, Coach C. S. Ward and Student Manager Murray Howard. The track stars went away with high expectations of making a good record, as they formed the backbone of one of the strongest track teams to be assembled at Boys' High.

Boys' High graduation exercises will be held at the auditorium armory Wednesday night, June 4, at 8 o'clock. There are about 275 in the graduating class. The graduates will be dressed in tuxedoes. Donald Smith has been chosen valedictorian of the class. A senior banquet will be held at the Atlanta Athletic Club following the exercises.

STANTON SCHOOL PUPILS PREPARE A MAY FESTIVAL

High third pupils have just finished their animal books. They drew pictures of animals and wrote a composition about each animal in their book. The books were beautifully done.

Stanton school is very busy getting ready for the May festival. Margaret Bearden is the May queen; Dorothy Bell is Springtime; Sara Corbett, Sara Wilhite, Mary Jones, Margaret Hatcher, Emma Hughes and Dorothy Courtney are the ladies in waiting; Christine Stephens and Mary Taylor are the flower girls.

Each grade will be dressed as flowers or birds or butterflies. The kindergarten children will be tulips and bees; low one will be pansies; high one will be violets; high two will be roses and bees; low three-two will be daisies; high three will be narcissi; grade four will be morning-glories and blue birds; grade five will be roses, pinks, bees and birds. Each grade has suitable songs and dances.

MORELAND SCHOOL PUPILS COMPOSE MUSICAL NUMBERS

The high sixth gardes are much interested and very busy getting ready for their promotion exercises. A large numbers of children are going to receive athletic buttons next week and fourteen sixth grade children will receive writing certificates.

We were all delighted to have a visit from our music supervisor, Miss Harralson. High 4-1 has made for Miss Harralson a most attractive booklet of their oginial musical compositions.

These compositions, words and music, deal chiefly with the Vikings and their deeds.

High 5-1 has made a book called "Westward Ho."

High 1-I are making stores for a little street which they are enjoying very much.

A number of children in High 4-II have flags on their desks for conduct and penmanship.

Every child in High 3 wrote a letter to their teacher, Miss Rowland.

High Four 2 got the attendance banner this week.

EDNA M'CORMICK.

BEN HILL SCHOOL SEVENTH PUPILS HOLD GRADUATION

On Friday evening in the Ben Hill Methodist church the graduation exercises of the seventh grade of the Ben Hill Grammar school will take place. The literary address will be given by Rev. Homer Thompson, and the delivery of certificates by W. A. Lynn.

The following will graduate: Jim Toni Bryant, Nick Ferrant, Marie Van Norden, James Turner, Catherine Baker, Olin Roberts, Emily Pitman, T. W. Fain, Louise McKay, Irving McWilliams, Winston Littlefield, Mildred Roberts.

One of the most remarkable and outstanding achievements of this class is the fact that in a class of only 15 pupils, there are two valedictorians, James Turner and Catherine Baker. But since the boy hasn't ever made a single mark but "A" in all of his seven years of school, he was given first place, and the girl second.

The program will be as follows—Processional, Mrs. W. O. Suttles; Invocation; song by school, "Welcome Sweet Springtime; salutatory, Catherine Baker; class history, Mildred Roberts; song by seventh grade, "Shepherd Boy;" class prophecy, Emily Pitman; class poem, Nick Ferrant; song by class, "Gypsy Dance;" advice to sixth grade, T. W. Fain; response by sixth grade, Ruth Norton; valedictory, James Turner; farewell song, seventh grade; address, Rev. Thompson; delivery of certificates, W. A. Lynn; award of ribbons and honors, Mrs. Strickland; benediction; recessional, "Happy Days Are Here Again."

WALTER CANDLER SPEAKS TO CLASS OF J. C. HARRIS

We haven't been here in a long time, but there is one word which explains it—promotion. We have been working, just as busy as bees, practicing for the promotion exercises.

A great honor was bestowed upon us last week when Mr. Walter T. Candler came to our school and gave us an interesting and helpful lecture on South America. We have had such a hard time securing South American literature, for this continent is considered a dark one, and few are interested in it, so we were so grateful to Mr. Candler for coming and helping us, and also grateful to Virginia Hill, our class president, for writing and asking him to come. Mr. Candler has made us all want to take a trip to South America, and we thank him for creating an interest for us in this continent.

FAMILY OF DUTCH VISIT GOLDSMITH SCHOOL CLASSES

The Dutch family paid us quite a compliment Monday by visiting our school. They entertained us with dances, speeches, songs and much interesting knowledge about Holland and its quaint people.

The sixth grade has been busy getting ready for their promotion day exercises. We were very delighted to have a Dutch family visit us Monday, May 26.

The fifth grade boys and girls are making the last two weeks of school the best. Our motto, "A good beginning makes a good ending" must be upheld and we are doing everything in our power to see that it is. Probably we are working harder because "last is best."

The fourth grade is all excited about our marshmallow feast we're going to have Wednesday. We're going out in the woods near a brook and have a regular picnic.

The third grade is very grateful to Miss Massengale for bringing out the Dutch people from Vollendam to see us. We had studied lots about them but they seem much more real to us since we've actually seen them in person. We feel greatly rewarded.

The second grade sure did enjoy the Dutch visitors that came last Monday. They have just finished the book of "Chi-wee and Loki." It is about Indian people.

The first grade was so happy to have the Dutch family come to our school. We liked the children very much. We are going to write a story about the visit.

The High 1 and Low 2 are studying very hard so that they will get promoted and have a wonderful vacation.

The kindergarten children have been busy and happy bringng paper for the paper sale. They are making their good luck pennies to begin their bank account next September when they go to the first grade.

Low 4, Low 3 combination class miss the children in their class out with mumps and measles and are looking forward to having them back again soon.

High 3 are on an imaginary trip to Japan.

The kindergarten children have all made interesting animal books. The children in high kindergarten are looking forward to being promoted to the first grade in June.

SYBIL NANCE.

HIGHLAND CLASS HAS PENMANSHIP RECORD IN CITY

Miss Speir and Miss Wyon tied on the paper sale we had last week. The sixth grade pupils enjoyed making art books. They made them out of note books and covered them over with wall paper. Many beautiful ones have been made by the children.

Miss Wyon's class is glad to have tied with the sixth grade in the paper sale.

Miss Orr's grade 5-III are going to improve their penmanship so as to get a penmanship certificate next year. They are enjoying organizing athletic clubs for the summer.

High and low kindergarten is going on a trip to Grant Park, where they will study the animals.

The whole school is looking forward to a happy and profitable vacation and we extend to the readers of The Constitution School Page best wishes for their happiness.

MURPHY JR. HIGH FUNDS INCREASE BY THREE SALES

The paper sale we had afforded a challenge for seven low one and seven low three. The class that had the least papers is to give the other class a party the last day of school. Seven low one bowed in defeat to seven low three.

The school had a cake sale. The mothers baked the cakes and gave them to be sold to make money for our P.-T. A.

We also had a rummage sale Saturday. The articles were taken to Auburn avenue and sold. This money, also, was given to the P.-T. A.

For the last two weeks, we have been busy taking examinations. Tuesday our teachers announced the names of pupils exempt in each examination.

The week of May 19-23, Murphy had splendid attendance.

The last P.-T. A. meeting of the year was held Wednesday, May 28, in the Whitefoord school auditorium. It was the "Daddies meeting."

FAITH ST. SCHOOL ORGANIZES TROOP FOR GIRL SCOUTS

The girls of Faith school are glad to have two young ladies take so much interest in us that they are going to organize a troop of Girl Scouts here. We had a troop of Boy Scouts last year, and wanted to form a troop of Girl Scouts but could not find a leader until Mrs. Hubert Kalb and Miss Evelyn Sherill offered to lead us. We have 59 prospects and hope to have even more next year. Any girl over 11 years old is eligible to join the Scouts. We have planned to meet in the dining room of Faith school.

We appreciate their interest and want to show our appreciation by attending every meeting of the year.

The ONE HE WANTED!

When Bobby Jones relentlessly drove his way through eight of the strongest opponents that America and England could produce to win the British amateur golf championship at old St. Andrews, he reached the goal he most coveted. He had won three United States open titles. The United States amateur had been his four times. For two successive years he won the British open trophy. But in two excursions in the British amateur—at Hoylake in 1921 and at Muirfield in 1926—he had been cut down in one of the earlier 18-hole matches. The Constitution artist above has combined an interesting close-up of Bobby in the center holding his famous putter, one of his best weapons, with two views of typical British golf courses and galleries. At the left, Bobby is shown in a sand trap at Sandwich in one of his recent practice rounds. At the right is a typical British gallery grouped around a wind-swept treeless course; even a larger gallery tumbled after Bobby and Roger Wethered in the final at St. Andrews yesterday and all but mobbed Bobby when he finished the winner.

CRACKERS WIN BY LATE RALLY

One Run in Ninth Sends Lookouts Down by 4-3 Count.

By Ralph McGill.

Old Climax stood on the burning deck, whence all but he had fled.

The score stood three and three with two men listed dead.

And on second there was Dumovich, a-waitin' for a ride.

While in the stands all hup had turned up its toes and died.

And Dumovich came trottin' home, a-wearin' the victory smile.

Which is probably just another way of telling that the Atlanta Crackers, after losing eight straight games to the Chattanooga Lookouts, drove home a run in the ninth Saturday afternoon at Spiller field to beat the Lookouts, 4 and 3, and likewise beat a jinx that has clung with them since April 15, when the season opened.

Yes, sir, the team that has kept the Lookouts in the blooming league proved that the longest lane has a turning and whipped over a win when Climax Blethen decided that all things come to him who helps himself and knocked a double off Art Decatur to score Nick Dumovich, running for Bill Barrett, who had hit a two-base bagger.

Two were out and things looked ominously like extra innings. Bill Barrett had skidded one right through Bob Lamotte's legs for a double. Dumovich went in to run for him.

Climax Hits Double.

And old Climax Blethen, who has lost a heap of games this year when he entered them as a relief man, won one with a double to center field that Bratcher didn't even try to field. He saw that Dumovich was in with the winning run.

It was one of those ding-dong ball games the Crackers won. It was a well-pitched game. Howard, who started for the Lookouts, pitched six and a third innings and allowed only two runs and four hits. He was taken out for Art Decatur to go in when

GEORGIA BOWS TO FORT BRAGG

Horse Guards and Benning Clash Today For State Polo Title.

By Roy White.

Georgia's polo championship will be settled at 3:30 o'clock this afternoon on the polo field at Fort McPherson, when the Governor's Horse Guard and Fort Benning officers meet. The Horse Guard won the National Guard and R. O. T. C. championship with a victory Thursday afternoon over the 178th Field Artillery from Savannah, and Fort Benning defeated the Sixth Cavalry from Fort Oglethorpe for the regular army championship, and now for the Georgia championship.

In the consolation finals Saturday afternoon Fort Bragg defeated the University of Georgia polo players by a 12-to-5 count. Georgia had a five-goal handicap. Two of Fort Bragg's best players, Captain Peter Rodes, a six-handicap man, and Captain Fleming, did not play.

A GOOD GAME.

Today's game should be one of the best of the tournament, as two experienced polo teams will be pitted against each other. The Horse Guards have been playing together for several years and this is the first time they have played together with any consistency.

Fort Benning has a spectacular team, and one which defeated Fort Bragg last Sunday afternoon.

The Horse Guard will lineup with Gay, Christian, Love and Moran in that order. Gay and Christian play the forward positions, while Love and Moran play a defensive game for the most part. Every one of the players are good, accurate drivers, and get plenty of distance. Moran is an expert at defending the goal with spectacular back handed stops, and in addition he is an excellent horseman.

The players on the Benning team include Lieutenants H. E. and H. D. Baker, twin brothers, who formerly lived in Atlanta. They attended Marist college here many years ago and were known as "Little" and "Big" Baker.

OTHER MEMBERS.

Major Lyman, Lieutenant W. H. Bartlett, Lieutenant Ben J cobs and Lieutenant J. G. Van Houton are other members of the Benning team.

More than 4,500 persons attended the opening of the Fourth Corps Area polo tournament last Sunday afternoon and officials at Fort McPherson have provided ample parking space for hundreds of automobiles today. The cars will be parked by the playing field on both sides and at the ends. There will be plenty of benches and chairs for spectators in front of the cars.

In the Saturday afternoon match, the playing of Colonel Paine and Lieutenant Jacoby was outstanding. Colonel Paine scored four goals and Jacoby three. Their accuracy in driving and recovering the ball aided materially in the high score.

Fort Bragg, minus the services of Captain Rodes and Captain Fleming, started out in the first chukker to win back those handicap goals and scored two before the period was half over. Colonel Paine scored the first and Captain Molitor the second goal. Another was scored in the second by Captain Crane after six misses near the goal. The Georgia players were bunching so that Fort Bragg had very few open shots.

ACTION A-PLENTY.

Things picked up in the third period when five Bragg goals were scored. Georgia never had a chance to bunch its players and Fort Bragg played a wide open game. Two more goals were added in the fourth chukker by Jacoby and Paine.

Georgia's best chance to score came in the fourth and fifth periods but they lacked the driving spirit that characterized their play during the week. Noble Jones made a spectacu-

MAWNIN'

By Ed Dunforth

"Bobby wins!"

That was shouted on the streets by newsboys before lunch time.

It was uttered in soda fountains where stenographers and bookkeepers crowded for swiss-on-rye and a coke . . . in department stores where tired-eyed girls brightened as they made conversation with their customers . . . in hotel lobbies where vestless drummers read the news as they lounged in chairs and chatted with whomsoever sat nearest.

"Mistah Bobby Jones won!"

Down on Decatur street in front of the fish stands where bucks and their women munched odorous morsels . . . in the canyon where teamsters and mules milled over the grave of the Union station . . . under the Courtland street viaduct where anything may happen in the shadows without detection . . . the echo of the news was multiplied.

"Wasn't it fine that Bobby won!"

Bank vice presidents said so to members of the $2-weekly Christmas Savings Club as they left the window—old gentlemen, neatly shaved and pressed, riding downtown to buy a newspaper from back home said so to the motorman, in spite of the sign overhead prohibiting such advances—cigar clerks gave it to merchant princes who stopped in for a pocket full of perfectos.

"Well, I see Bobby won it!"

For the day the hackneyed expressions of greeting, of making talk were forgotten—nobody in Atlanta said, "Well, whadderya know," because everybody knew what everybody else knew. It was the only news of the day.

And if an unlimited ear were granted, one might have heard the phrase rippling from coast to coast and from the lakes to the gulf. For the day a nation was happy because a man had sailed across the ocean to get something fine, and had gotten it.

HIS MOTHER WAS HERE.

Mrs. Robert Tyre Jones was with her husband at St. Andrews when he won.

His mother was here in Atlanta sick. Big Bob Jones stayed at home with her until the news came that Bobby was safely finished.

It was at her request that he did not come downtown until the suspense was over.

A friend of the family was downtown early at a newspaper office waiting at the telegraph desk for the word. He called the elder Jones immediately.

COMPLETES THE CIRCLE.

"I am glad he won mainly because it completes the circle," "Big Bob" Jones said yesterday. "The British amateur is not primarily a test of good golf. It is a test of physical endurance and mental poise. The seven short matches before the finals ereate a unique situation in which the best golfer does not always win.

"The British amateur championship was the one Rob wanted to win. He went after it. There had been so much talk about it, too—how he wanted to win it and how he was staking all his hopes on it. He just had to win.

"That completes the circle—he has won every major championship now—I know he is tired and I can assure you the home folks are worn out, too. No game is so wearing on the nerves of those who play and those who follow with an interest in the outcome of a match as golf. Rob's mother has been sick for some time, but she seems better already. The news was just great."

MAIDEN HAPPY AS BOBBY WINS

Old Teacher "Pulled" for Rain To Aid Atlantan's Game.

By Brian Bell,

Associated Press Sports Writer.

NEW Y RK, May 31.—News of Bobby Jones' victory in the British amateur golf championship brought pleasure to many New Yorkers, but all the joy of the others combined could not equal the unadulterated enthusiasm of one little Scot.

Stewart Maiden, the champion's first and only golf teacher, choked up with emotion when he was informed that his star pupil really had won the one title he needed to complete his collection.

"I am glad," said Maiden, who has a golf school in New York. "I am more than glad. There are no words for me to use to tell how pleased I am."

"Of course I expected him to win, and after he got in the final at 36 holes I felt confident, but one never knows what will happen in golf. He's the greatest golfer in the world, but he had some narrow escapes in the week's play. No, you never can tell in this game.

"Bob's not only the greatest golfer in the world, he's the greatest there ever has been, and maybe the greatest there ever will be.

Talks of Strain.

"I suffered with him during the week. One who has never been through the terrible strain of a championship like this cannot realize what it takes out of the players. Bob, it seems to me, suffers more than most. I'll bet he hasn't eaten a real meal all week nor had a full night's sleep.

"And the strain of this championship was more than any other for this is the only one he has never won and the one he had set his heart on. He knew that everyone expected him to win, and that a lot of people were rooting hard for him to come through. And with all these 18-hole matches where one slip may ruin you, with never a chance to get that stroke back—it's terrible.

"It's great that the boy now has won all the major titles there are, but it's sad in a way too, for there's nothing left for him to win. All the rest of his victories will be just repetitions.

HARD TEST.

"I know he had to work hard for this championship, harder perhaps than in any other. St. Andrews, lightning fast, was not suited to his game. I don't care how much he tells the home folk there that he loves the old course. He's making my fellow Scots feel good.

"He couldn't like it from a golf standpoint when it's as hard as cement and the greens slick as glass. He pitches his shots to the greens, and while of course he can run the ball up (for he wouldn't be the greatest golfer in

Georgia Lawyers Congratulate Bob

BRUNSWICK, Ga., May 31.—(AP)—The Georgia Bar Association, in annual session at Sea Island, today sent a cable to Bobby Jones, congratulating him on his victory at St. Andrews in the British amateur golf tournament. Bobby is chairman of the relief committee of the bar association.

Announcement of Jones' victory was made to the convention by Logan Bleckley, treasurer, and was greeted with wild applause. Amid cheers a motion was carried that a cablegram of congratulations be sent to Jones.

'Lucky To Win,' Bob Tells Fans

Victory Over Roger Wethered Completes Atlantan's Golf Dream; Fans Go Wild.

By Arch Rodgers,
United News Staff Correspondent.

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland, May 31.—(UN)—The world of golf no longer holds a major title beyond the grasp of Bobby Jones.

The stalwart Atlantan today attained the one championship of importance which previously had eluded him, winning the British amateur crown by defeating Roger Wethered, former title holder, in a one-sided 36-hole final match, 7 up and 6 to play.

It was all Jones today after an even start over the first nine holes, which raised British hopes high for a while. Breaking par over the historic "Old Course" by two strokes in the morning, Bobby acquired a commanding lead which Wethered never had a chance to overcome.

GALLERY GOES WILD.

So magnificently did Jones achieve this last, long-sought triumph that when his winning putt went down the enthusiasm of the Scots in the tremendous gallery of some 12,000 got beyond control, and there were riotous scenes as men and women fought and trampled on each other to get near the new champion. Wethered, a British amateur champion himself back in 1923, fought courageously to keep within striking distance of Jones, but the task was too great. On only two holes out of the 30 that completed the match did Bobby drop a stroke to par. The Atlantan did not go out for many birdies, bagging only four, but he kept shooting par until his opponent cracked.

"I did my best, I just wasn't good enough. There goes a real champion of golf," said Wethered as Jones was swept away by the throng, with police and his friends battling desperately to keep him whole to enjoy his new honors.

Then Colonel Skene, captain of the Royal and Ancient, presented Bobby with the cup, and Bobby ducked his head and smiled and made his little speech:

BOB MAKES SPEECH.

"Ladies and Gentlemen:

"I always enjoy being where people eat well and sleep well. Well, you can thank golf, that's the way the people of St. Andrews do. That's why I love you and this grand old course.

"I honestly feel I have been fortunate in winning this cup, which I wanted more than any other."

Jones won the British open championship in 1926 and 1927 and the United States open in 1923, 1926 and 1929, and the United States amateur in 1924, 1925, 1927 and 1928. He will compete for the British open again at Hoylake, June 16.

It was clear and cool when Jones and Wethered started out in the morning, with about 2,000 spectators on hand and a brave display of posters put out by the London Daily Express: "Sock him, Roger."

Bobby won the toss for the honor and sent a tee shot screaming down the left side of the fairway, outdriving his opponent by 25 yards. Wethered's approach was to six feet, however, and he just missed the putt for a birdie, taking a half in fours.

They halved the second in par fours, Wethered pulling his drive but recovering well. Jones won the third and went one up, chipping accurately and going down in four, Wethered missing a six footer for a half.

Misses His Chance.

Again they halved two holes in four, with Wethered always having a chance on the greens if he could have rammed home six and eight-foot putts. At the sixth, the Briton chipped to within a foot of the cup, and squared the match with a birdie three.

A half in four, another in three and again a half in four followed.

ATLANTA CHEERS BOBBY'S VICTORY

Excitement of Week Breaks Loose as News Arrives.

Atlanta, from where Bobby Jones has gone to win some of the world's most coveted golfing honors, cheered when word reached here from St. Andrews, Scotland, that Bobby had won the British amateur tournament.

The pent-up excitement of a week broke loose when the news was flashed throughout the city. The jubilation over Jones' victory was perhaps all the greater because the British amateur tournament was the only major golfing event that Jones had not won previously—although he had tried for it twice, in 1921 and in 1926.

Newspapers here issued extra editions, proclaiming Bobby's victory, and the word was flashed over radio stations. At the East Lake Country Club Jones' victory was greeted with wild cheers. News spread over the course like wildfire as caddies, forgetting their etiquette of the links, yelled the word around the course from one to another. Frank Bell, the club pro, danced with glee and the members shouted their joy.

FATHER "PROUD."

Robert P. Jones, Atlanta attorney and father of the champion of champions, was pacing the floor of his home on Peachtree road when the good news reached him shortly after 9 o'clock. He had been awake since early in the day, receiving telephone reports of his son's progress from a friend downtown in a newspaper office. News of the victory received, the father's voice shook with emotion and he said: "I'm mighty happy and mighty proud of my boy. That's all I can say." At the telephone near him were little Clara Malone Jones, aged 4, and her little brother, Robert T. Jones, III. They cheered when they learned of their father's victory.

As newsboys dashed through downtown and residential streets, shouting the good news about the East

Brown Tie Luck, Bob Jones Thinks

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland, May 31.—Bobby Jones started out wearing a brown necktie the first day of play in the British amateur championship here, friends say, and wore it through to his victorious finish.

After coming through his first match safely he decided the brown tie was a good luck omen and refused to change it. He removed it only at night, they say. Now the necktie is one of his cherished souvenirs, second only in importance to the British amateur trophy.

GATLIN SECOND WITH JAVELIN IN CHI MEET

Atlantans Finish Well Up in Annual Stagg Track Events.

CHICAGO, May 31.—(Special.)—Scoring in three events against the cream of the nation's high school athletes, Boys' High school of Atlanta finished well up with the leaders in the Stagg interscholastic track and field championships which ended at the University of Chicago today.

The 15 points which Boys' High school was awarded for taking a second place in the javelin, a third place in the quarter mile, and a sixth place in the mile relay moved the team into a tie for 11th place with Central High school of Tulsa, Oklahoma.

Georgia Military Academy, of College Park, scored in only one event, George Proctor taking a fifth place in one of the three quarter mile races to give his school two points.

The best of the Georgia performances was Gatlin's winning of second place and eight points with a throw of 174 feet in the javelin throw. Ed Purvis, of Mattoon, Illinois, won the event with a toss of 178 feet 1 1-2 inches.

Charles Howard added six more points to the Boys' High's total by making a strong finish in the third of the quarter mile contests to take third place behind Ivan Fuqua, of Brazil, Indiana, and Fred Walts, of Winnemucca, Nevada. Howard was unfortunate in having been drawn to compete in the race, as the time was 49 7-10 seconds, only 3-10 of a second behind the mark which Fuqua set at last year's meet. The other two quarter mile races were run in 50 5-10 and in 50 6-10 seconds respectively, and Howard was close up enough at the finish in his faster race to have won either of the other two.

The final point for the Atlantans was won when its four men won sixth place in the mile relay behind the San Angelo, Texas, quartet, which set a new meet record of 3:29 7-10 for the distance.

Chicopee Wins 16-Inning Battle

MONROE, Ga., May 31.—For 16 innings Monroe and the Chicopee baseball team from Gainesville battled in one of the hardest fought games ever witnessed on the local diamond before the Gainesville nine emerged winner by the score of 4 to 2. If it had not been for errors on both sides the score would doubtless have been 1 to 0 in favor of Chicopee.

Hyder gave up a total of eight hits and caused a total of 15 men to miss the last strike. Rogers struck out eight Monroe hitters and gave up seven bingles.

Chicopee tied the score in the ninth and neither side scored until the sixteenth when Chicopee won the game on hits by Bone, Crow and Rogers.

This was Monroe's first loss of the season but it was the first time they had met the Chicopee team. It will be remembered that Chicopee won the

WEBB TO MEET TOMMY RIOS HERE JUNE 10

Tough Welter Signs To Fight Man Who Beat Goodrich.

Spike Webb, who won his last three fights in Atlanta by knockouts, has signed to meet Tommy Rios, Mexican welterweight, who won a decision over Ted Goodrich, here on June 10, according to announcement from Promoter Eddie Hanlon Saturday night.

Ted Goodrich was unable to fight a return bout with Rios because of his health and Hanlon tried for several days before he could get a man to meet the tough Mexican.

BAKER REFUSES.

Sergeant Sammy Baker, who also defeated Goodrich, was one of those who would not agree to meet Rios here, according to Hanlon. "I wired Baker an offer of $1,500 to fight here but he would not accept," said Hanlon.

Spike Webb agreed. Atlanta fans familiar with Webb's record will recall that he knocked out Stiles Attaway in two rounds here in one of his last three fights.

Webb has plenty of "heart" and his agreement to meet Rios was not surprising. "I know that boy. He will give Rios a great battle and I would not be surprised to see him knock him out. He has one of the best right hands in the game and if he lands that he will be the winner."

BEAT TED.

Rios won a decision over Goodrich in Chicago shortly after the Atlanta welter had defeated a couple of good men here. Hanlon had the two men signed for a return match at the auditorium in Atlanta but Goodrich was unable to go on with the match.

Hanlon is planning a sensational ten-round semi-windup which will feature two men who have appeared here as main-bout principals in the past. He will have some additional preliminaries.

Hanlon is the promoter who has done most to build up the fight game here and he believes he has a popular match in Rios and Webb.

Harvey-Devos Bout Slated for London

LONDON, May 31.—(AP)—Jimmie Bronson, American boxing manager, announced today that he had completed arrangements for a bout at the national sporting club here in October between Len Harvey, British middleweight champion, and Rene Devos, Belgian titleholder from the Bronson stable.

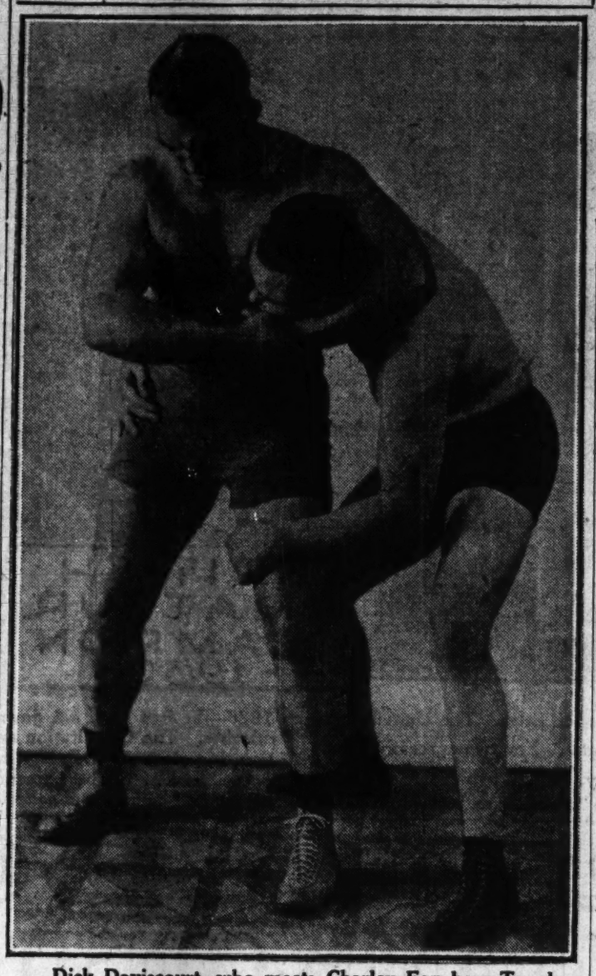

Negotiations are under way, Bronson said, for a world title fight between Devos and Mickey Walker, the titleholder in the United States this summer. If Devos wins the title in this match, Bronson said, he will defend the world crown against Harvey.

The National Sporting Club also announced that Bronson had been appointed American representative for the organization. He acted as chief second for Gene Tunney in the retired champion's title matches.

'Rough Richard' in Action

Dick Daviscourt, who meets Charley Fox here Tuesday night at the opening of the outdoor wrestling season at the ball park, is shown applying his favorite hold, the headlock. Daviscourt has not appeared here this season. His return will be welcomed by a host of mat fans. Jim McMillin and Rocco appear on the same card.

Daviscourt and Fox Wrestle Tuesday Night

Weber Arranges All-Star Card for Opening of Outdoor Season Here.

There has, in times past, been a lot of argument pro and con about what is likely to happen when an irresistible force meets an immovable object.

But what will happen Tuesday night at Spiller field when the 20-minute egg from Cleveland meets the 20-minute egg from California?

Plenty, as one might guess.

Charley Fox, the Cleveland tough boy, who uses manhole covers to play tiddledewinks with, and "Rough Richard" Dick Daviscourt, who thinks Simon Legree was a great man, meet in the main event Tuesday night as Promoter Henry Weber opens the outdoor wrestling show at Spiller field.

Just how he got the game's two "hardest" characters to meet on the mat is something to guess about. But Weber does things that way. He gives the public good matches and the wrestlers real money. And they come to his matches.

OLD FAVORITE.

Dick Daviscourt, an old favorite here, will meet a real foeman who fights fire with fire in Charley Fox. Fox likes his matches rough and he can hold his own in any old barroom battle that they stage now between ropes.

In the semi-windup Weber has Jim McMillin, no meek lad. McMillin was one of those good tackles who opened holes for Red Grange to gallop through at Illinois. He took up wrestling when he got out and he has made a great name for himself in the game.

JIM McMILLIN.

McMillan meets Rocco, Italian title claimant from New York. It will be Rocco's first appearance here. He is, says Weber, a real heavyweight whom the fans will like.

The feature match goes for two hours, Police Gazette rules. The semi-windup will be a one-hour match.

A short preliminary will open the show, making three matches in all.

250 RINGSIDES.

There will be only 250 ringside seats at the ball park. The ring will be close to the box seats and will give fans in the seats behind that section a great view. It will be an ideal seating arrangement for the wresling matches. Lights have been placed in the park and the whole program is ready. The 250 ringside seats will be around the ring which will be sitting about where home plate is.

The weather man promises warm weather without rain. Fans will find it comfortable out of doors. In the event of rain the match will be postponed until the next night of the next week. Promoter Weber announces that in the event of rain the fans may keep their tickets until the match is held or may get their money back.

The usual prices will prevail, with ladies admitted to any seat in the house for 75 cents.

LAWSON WINS GAME.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., May 31.—Thornton Lee, Tampa's clever young southpaw, allowed the Tars only six hits here today, but they combined them with nine bases on balls for as many runs and scored a 6-to-2 victory over the Smokers in the deciding game of the series.

Two passes and a pair of singles gave Jacksonville three runs in the third frame and a lead which never was passed after Tampa had scored once in the opening inning. A hit, three following walks and the squeeze play enabled the Tars to shove over another brace of tallies in the fourth.

Howard Lawson kept Tampa's seven bingles well spaced and was particularly effective with men on base.

ALL-CALIFORNIA NET BATTLE SET IN FRENCH MEET

Helens Contest Crown as Bill Tilden Meets Henri Cochet.

By Thomas T. Topping,
Associated Press Sports Writer.

AUTEUIL, France, May 31.—(AP)—America's standard-bearers, outdid themselves in the French tennis championships today, creating an All-California final for the women's title and landing Big Bill Tilden in the title round against Henri Cochet for the men's singles crown.

Mrs. Helen Wills Moody mowed down Fraulein Cecilie Aussem, of Germany, 6-2, 6-1, in a match interrupted by rain, and Big Bill Tilden turned back his old rival, Jean Borotra, of France, 2-6, 6-2, 6-4, 4-6, 6-3, but the biggest surprise was the smashing victory of Helen Jacobs over Senorita Elia De Alvarez, of Spain, to the tune of 6-1, 6-0.

MISS JACOBS GREAT.

Miss Jacobs, for the first time since she came to Europe, gave proof that the American committee made no mistake when it selected her as second only to Queen Helen herself. She overpowered the highly rated Spanish player by strong driving, cunning change of pace and length and a magnificent overhead game coupled with unusual agility and speed at covering court.

Paris fans, leaving the stadium under the spell of Miss Jacobs' splendid effort, were bemoaning the fact that Europe must look to the United States for a woman player capable of giving Mrs. Moody a real battle. These two Berkeley (Cal.) girls playing away from home will meet at 3 o'clock tomorrow for the title Mrs. Moody has held for the last two years.

The world's champion, in her match with Fraulein Aussem, went at the assignment in her usual businesslike manner, apparently caring no more for the drizzle of rain which fell than for the few winning shots her opponent scored. Both players were drenched and a halt had to be called in the second set when the rain increased to a downpour.

Mrs. Moody's victory, although not quite as spectacular as that of her California rival, left her still the favorite to win the title in the minds of most of the 10,000 spectators present today.

BILL PROVES POWER.

Tilden again proved that he can generally handle the Bounding Basque but Cochet maintained his position of favorite for the title by crushing Baron Humbert De Morpurgo, of Italy, 7-5, 6-1, 6-2.

Big Bill had mapped out a plan of campaign which he carried through without faltering, even in the face of an interruption by rain which gave the fast-tiring Basque an opportunity to recuperate.

The American champion played as though glued to the baseline and forced Borotra to play the same type of game. The result was that the bounding one had few opportunities to charge to the net where his smashing and volleying talents make him most formidable.

Intent on keeping Borotra at a safe distance, Tilden refused sometimes to take advantage of opportunities for winning strokes if they were the least hazardous.

Cochet looked decidedly more impressive in eliminating De Morpurgo in straight sets. Always a slow starter, Cochet appeared to be experimenting in the first set. He had some difficulty dealing with De Morpurgo's high-bounding first service but soon found the solution lay in taking the ball on the rise. His lightning returns several times caught the Italian nobleman before he had finished his service contortions.

Travelers Release Pitcher Mulcahy

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., May 31.—(AP)—Phil Mulcahy, right-handed pitcher for the Little Rock Travelers, today was given his unconditional release and Ray Pipkins, another twirler, was returned to the Shawnee, Oklahoma, club of the St. Louis Cardinal chain. The action made room for three new players obtained by the Travelers last week.

Outfielder George Blackerby, coming here from Dallas, is expected to join the travelers in Memphis tomorrow, while Outfielder Art Jahn and Pitcher Joe Marty are to report in Mobile Monday.

Hugh Starling May Hurl Today

Hugh Starling, University of Alabama pitcher, who joined the Crackers last week, going on the active list Friday, is likely to see action in the double-header at Nashville today, where the Crackers open their road trip. "I'd like him to finish a game before starting one," said Dobbs Saturday, "but I think I will use him Sunday at Nashville."

SMITHIES BOW TO LAGRANGE

Tech High Gets Lead But Fails as Foes Open Attack.

LAGRANGE, Ga., May 31.—LaGrange High made a clean sweep of the championship series with Tech High here Saturday afternoon, winning the final game, 5 to 2. The series was to decide the state high school championship.

As a result of this afternoon's victory, LaGrange finished its 1930 schedule undefeated, winning 13 games.

In today's game Wilson, of LaGrange, and Mable, of Tech High, hooked up in a neat mound duel. Wilson gave up six hits compared to seven for Mable. The Tech moundsman, however, issued bases on balls.

The Smithies got off to a good start by scoring two runs in the first inning, before Wilson settled down. After that Wilson tightened and Tech High did not threaten again until the eighth, when a walk and two singles loaded the bases, but smart fielding checked the rally.

LaGrange scored one in the second and tied the score in the third. Floyd Smith, local first baseman, broke the tie in the fifth with a circuit smash to left field. LaGrange's other two runs were scored in the sixth.

Ball led Tech High in hitting, getting a single and a double. Stone, H. Whitten and Keeble had two hits each for LaGrange.

BLACK TORNADOES WIN.

With Johnson pitching steady ball, particularly in the pinches, the Atlanta Black Tornadoes defeated the Atlanta Cubs, 2 to 1, Saturday afternoon on the Clark University diamond. The losers secured only five hits but bunched a couple in the early innings to score one run.

The slicer has a job on his hands, and one well worth accomplishing, because the straight-flying ball is satisfying in just about the degree that the slice is aggravating. The correct start toward permanently curing a slice—and I promise you faithfully your slice can be cured—is to get firmly into your mind that the motivating force with your golf club is smoothness of action and timing. Now smoothness of action is the opposite of slugging. In the slug swing there can hardly be any timing, and without timing there can hardly be any good result. Whatever the restrictions of your swing, at least you can be smooth with it. Half swingers, flat swingers, aged swingers, beginning swingers—any type or character of golfer can at least be smooth. If you can't be smooth with your swing, you can try to be. Trying to be will establish the fact that you have made an important change in your mental attitude regarding the golf swing—and from that point you can begin to progress, and also doubtless get rid of your slice, which is the job immediately to hand.

Keeping your hands back of the iron clubhead when swinging through is one of the fundamentals of good iron shots. Chester Horton, foremost golf instructor of the country, tells you how you can attain this in a specially prepared monograph on long iron shots. Send your request for it to this newspaper, addressed to Mr. Horton. Enclose a stamped envelope addressed to yourself, and this instruction will be sent to you free.

BALANCED TEAM FLASHES POWER IN TAKING MEET

Stanford's Stars Shine as Cardinals Take Safe Second Place.

By Alan J. Gould.

HARVARD STADIUM, CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 31.—(AP)—The superior all-around strength of Southern California's Trojans triumphed over the individual brilliance of Stanford's Cardinals, defending titleholders, today and swept them to victory in the 54th Intercollegiate A. A. A. A. track and field championships, a sensational battle featured by the greatest collection of performances in the history of the classic.

Three records were shattered and a fourth equaled in the two-day struggle as the two Pacific coast rivals staged a spectacular fight for team honors. For a time Harvard unexpectedly made it a three-cornered affair with a surprising show of strength, but the Crimson was unable to keep up the pace all the way.

Scoring in 11 of the 15 finals, the stalwart band of 16 Southern Californians rolled up the impressive total of 44 1-4 points. This was sufficient to give the Trojans an 8-point margin over Stanford, which finished second with 36 1-4 points, as the Cardinals yielded the crown they had worn for three years in a row. Harvard finished a good third with 23 1-2 points, Michigan fourth with 14 1-4 as the Wolverines participated for the first time since 1919, and Yale fifth with 12 3-4.

Stanford, with her twin stars, Eric Krenz and Harlow Rothert, in rare form, furnished most of the record-breaking thrills. The Cardinals also led in first places, collecting four titles while Southern California bagged only two. Right down the line, however, the Trojans had too much all-around strength, and they clinched the meet with a finishing burst as Bill Carls and Ed Payne ran one-two in the finals of the 220-yard low hurdles.

Rothert's marvelous heave of 52 feet 1-4 inch in the shot put trials, beating his own former meet mark and also surpassing the American record, withstood all further attacks today to give the Stanford star his second successive championship in this event. Meanwhile he was joined by his team captain, Eric Krenz, in record breaking. Krenz hurled the discus to a new meet mark of 160 feet 9 3-4 inches. Krenz had achieved a throw of 163 feet 8 inches the day before, but this was not allowed because of the wind and was eliminated from the list today in view of his officially acceptable accomplishment.

The third record to fall was in the javelin throw, Kenneth Churchill, of the University of California, breaking the meet mark for the second successive day with a toss of 212 feet 5 inches. Besides surpassing his day-old toss of 207 feet 8 1-2 inches, Churchill's throw equaled the American record, set at Los Angeles in 1925 by the veteran Finn, Jonni Myrra, former olympic champion.

Sprint honors were divided by the two youthful Pacific coast stars, Frank Wykoff, of Southern California, and Hector Dyer, of Stanford, at the expense of the bespectacled Michigan negro, Eddie Tolan, holder of the official world's record of 9.5 seconds. Wykoff, with a great opening burst of speed, stood off Tolan to win the 100-yard dash by two feet in 9.7 seconds, equaling the I. C. A. A. A. record for the second time in the meet.

Dyer was third in the century, but he came back, in the closing event of the day, to outrun Tolan and capture the 220-yard honors by a scant yard in 21.3 seconds.

Thus the far west, in taking the east's blue ribbon track and field classic for the ninth time in ten straight years, also contributed all of the record performances and romped off with seven of the fifteen individual championships.

Nevertheless, the east contributed a succession of brilliant individual achievements to today's finals. Harvard made it interesting for the westerners for a time, due mainly to surprising victories by Eugene (Red) Record in the high hurdles and Oscar Sutermeister in the pole vault, both at the expense of coast favorites. Record beat out the Trojan star, Jordy Welsh, in the final gallop over the timbers as Smith, of Stanford, stumbled and fell sprawling to the track. Sutermeister, alone of nine contestants who cleared 13 feet in the pole vault, went on to negotiate 13 feet 6 inches and win handily as all eight of his rivals tied for second place.

George Bullwinkle, a one-man team from the College of the City of New York, raced his field groggy to win the one-mile run in the sterling time of 4:18.4. An hour later he came back in the half-mile, seccing the pace for 500 yards, but lacking the strength to match the sensational closing rush of Russell Chapman, of Bates, who won in 1:52.4, within two-tenths of a second of the American record, set by Ted Meredith in 1916 and equaled in the I. C. A. A. A. A. meet last year by Phil Edwards, of New York University.

The complete scores:

Southern California 44 1-4; Stanford 36 1-4; Harvard 23 1-2; Michigan 14 1-4; Yale 12 3-4; Columbia 10; Pennsylvania 8 1-4; City College of New York and Colgate 8 each; Cornell 7 1-4; Penn State, New York University, California and Bates 7 each; Dartmouth 5 1-2; Maine and Syracuse 4 each; Holy Cross and Princeton 3 each; Brown and Michigan State 2 each.

'A Great Champion,' Wethered Says as Jones Wins British Title

BOBBY 'GANGED' BY WILD FANS AFTER MATCH

Jones missing a two-footer on the ninth green, and they turned all square.

At the tenth, Wethered blew a one-foot putt and Jones win with a par four. After a half in par threes at the short eleventh and one in fours at the twelfth, where Bobby had a two-foot putt for a win, the American won the next four holes in a row.

Brilliant Golf.

Jones played brilliantly at the thirteenth, while Wethered pulled his tee shot, sliced an iron and was over the green with his approach, taking five to Bob's four. The Atlantan hit a beautiful brassie at the fourteenth and chipped dead for a birdie four. He won the fifteenth when the Briton missed a three-footer, and the sixteenth four to six, when Wethered sliced out of bounds and played three from the tee.

Wethered hit a great iron shot at the seventeenth and just missed getting down for an eagle three, winning with his birdie four to Jones' five to cut the latter's advantage to four up. They halved the eighteenth in regulation fours and went to lunch, with the end in sight.

Starting out again in the afternoon, with the crowd now swelled to well-nigh unmanageable size, Wethered made a gallant effort to win. He laid Bobby a stymie at the nineteenth and won with a par four, cutting Jones' lead to three up.

TAKES THREE PUTTS.

But on the very next hole, Wethered treated himself to three putts within 18 feet, and Jones went 4-up again. They halved the next three holes, each having a birdie four at the long 23rd, where both reached the green in two and the Englishman rolled up a beautiful approach to the lip of the cup.

Wethered's last stand was made at the 24th, where he sank a 35-footer for a birdie three. From this point on, however, it was all Jones.

The new champion settled down to par golf for the remainder of the outward nine, and it was good enough to win him two of the remaining three holes, so that he turned 5-up. A birdie three at the 28th where he ran an approach to within three feet, made Bobby 6-up. They halved the short 29th in par figures.

COMES THE END.

The end came on the 30th green, the famous 12th, where Wethered, with a two-foot putt for a half which would have kept the match going, missed and extended a congratulatory hand to the victor.

"I sure was glad to win that one," said Bobby, beaming, as the crowd closed in upon them. Police and friends fought hard to rescue the new champion from the enthusiasm of the wildly cheering, trampling throng. Jones' progress back to the clubhouse was achieved with the utmost difficulty.

Finally, with the crowd appearing just about able to take Bobby away from his escort and probably pull him to pieces in quest of souvenirs, some thoughtful soul shouted:

A GREAT THOUGHT.

"There's a half-penny somebody's dropped."

It worked, and Bobby was hustled to the Royal and Ancient Club to receive the trophy.

Bob To Take It Easy Until Open.

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland, May 31. After Bobby Jones had been rescued from the hands of an admiring mob, he found time to say to friends that he considered himself lucky to win and that he was very tired. His eyes were sunken and his face showed the strain of a week of furious competition.

"I wanted to win this championship more than anything else in golf," he said. "And the way I feel right now nothing else matters. I will do my best in the other tournaments but this was the big shot. I always wanted to win and doubted I ever could."

Jones plans to play no serious tournament golf between now and the British open championship, June 16-18. He leaves Sunday for Paris with Mrs. Jones and Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Johnston and several other friends. He and Johnston will play Monday at St. German in a four-ball match with French golfers. He will return for a few days' practice before the open begins at Hoylake.

New East Lake Course Opened

MAIDEN HAPPY AS BOBBY WINS

the world if he couldn't make all the shots), he would rather pitch.

"In this championship, he couldn't do much, if any, real pitching and had to run up. At that he must have readjusted his game to suit the course pretty well, for I have been keeping pretty close tab on his scoring straight through and he was not far from even fours for the whole competition. Maybe a stroke or so over, not more.

Pull for Rain.

"I picked up the paper every morning and looked to see if there was anything about rain at St. Andrews, and when there was nothing I said to myself, 'Why doesn't it rain?' An all-night rain, once or twice, soaking those old greens so they would hold a pitch and I was certain in my mind Bob would coast home.

"I hope he doesn't play a bit until just before the open. It will take him fully two weeks to relax after this week's work."

"Why don't you send him a cable," "Kilty" was asked.

"I did. I sent him one in the middle of the week and told him I knew he would do it."

MODEST MAIDEN.

It was suggested that he might cable the tip to the champion to refrain from golf for 10 days.

"Bob doesn't need any advice from me," was the reply to this hint.

The modest Maiden would not say so, but as a matter of fact Jones gets all his golf advice from the man who started him out as a small boy, 20 years ago, on the trail to golfing honors no other player has known.

"What about the open?" Maiden was asked.

"If he can recover from this strain he should be the man they will have to beat there, but what difference does that make? This is the one he wanted to win. He's happy now regardless of anything else and so am I."

'Death Valley' Scott Promoted to Majors

MEMPHIS, Tenn., May 31.—(AP)—Jim "Death Valley" Scott is going back to the major leagues.

The promotion of the former pitching ace from the Southern to the National league umpiring staff was announced here today by John D. Martin, president of the Southern.

Scott will officiate in his last Southern game here this afternoon and will report Monday to President Heydler, of the National.

Mr. Martin announced the appointment of Henry "Cotton" Knaupp, former New Orleans player who broke a leg while sliding home at Nashville in 1926, as umpire to succeed Scott in the Southern.

"Death Valley"—he came from that part of the west—earned a name for himself on major league mounds before the World War. He went over seas as a captain, came back and got into baseball again. His transfer interrupts his third year as a Southern Association umpire.

Mr. Martin said the promotion places six former Southern umpires on major league staffs, or just one-fourth of the combined umpires—one-fourth of the National and American staffs—on major loops this year.

Roy Dunn Ready For Flowers Bout

Completely recovered from an injury sustained in a fall in his match with California Joe Gans, Roy Dunn, the Macon flash, will meet Cecil Flowers, brother of the late Tiger in a preliminary on the Walker-Wright card in the city auditorium the night of June 17, Promoter Clevy Roby announces.

Flowers, too, is in the pink of condition, and has picked up a lot of added confidence by winning nine out of ten fights in Florida rings. Flowers and Dunn fought once before here and it was one of the greatest negro battles in the city's pugilistic history.

"They are sluggers, both," said Roby, "and I think their fight will run the main bout a close race in popular interest and thrills. I can vouch for the sincerity of the principals and if Flowers and Dunn put up half the battle that Walker and Wright do, the public will get its money's worth in these two attractions alone."

Roby is making elaborate arrangements for this show and is sparing no expense, he says.

Quitman forfeiting, 12 to 0, to Tallahassee, a game that was scheduled for links in the latter city, and Valdosta downing Albany, on Radium Springs course, 7 1-2 to 4 1-2. Winning meant that Valdosta, for the second consecutive time is league champion.

The Albany team, for whom all other teams in the league, except Valdosta, were pulling to win, made a gallant fight, and it was only when the last foursome, on the second round of nine holes, had completed their match that victory for Valdosta was assured. Valdosta now has the enviable position of having won two straight championships in as many consecutive seasons. The silver cup, which is the pennant for this league, is, by by-laws, adopted when the league was organized, to become the permanent property of the team first winning the league championship for three consecutive seasons. When all is said, it has to be admitted that Valdosta has the best team in this league.

That town can muster eight players who put out tip-top golf, any day in any week. Furthermore, in Maxwell Oliver, Billy Oliver, Johnny Oliver and George Converse, Valdosta has four golfers who, likely, could win, in a series of games, from any city or town in Georgia, including Atlanta if Bobby Jones declined to play on a team from there. Johnny Oliver is present Georgia amateur state champion, and Maxwell Oliver, Billy Oliver, and George Converse, have each, in their time, won the Piney Woods championship, played for in Thomasville each July, and which is just as difficult to annex as the first place in the Georgia state golf tournament. It is so hard to win that Johnny Oliver has as yet not captured it.

Standing of teams at the close of the Georgia-Florida Golf league season was:

TEAMS—	W.	L.	T.	Pct.
Valdosta	9	1	0	.900
Tallahassee	8	2	0	.800
Thomasville	4	5	1	.444

ATLANTA CHEERS BOBBY'S VICTORY

Excitement of Week Breaks Loose as News Arrives.

Lake Country Club's most noted member, people cheered and rushed to buy newspapers to get details of the final play. Throughout the city it was the one absorbing topic of conversation.

The cheering was not confined to Atlanta alone, for the Georgia Bar Association in annual convention at Sea Island Beach, Ga., heard the news quickly. Logan Bleckley, of Atlanta, treasurer, announced the victory on the convention floor. There was wild applause. The convention passed, amid cheers and shouts, a resolution to send Jones a congratulatory cablegram. Jones, prominent in legal circles of the city, began practicing law a few years ago and is a member of the association.

ELKS SEND HONOR.

Walter P. Andrews, of Atlanta, grand exalted ruler of the B. P. O. E., sent Jones, an honorary life member of the Atlanta Elks lodge, a message conveying the "joyous congratulations of 800,000 brother Elks."

Atlanta has learned to expect a victory nearly every time Bobby carries his golfing wars to other fronts, but the champion's keen desire to win the British title found the city unusually interested over his play in the British amateur.

The title won at St. Andrews is the tenth major tournament he has won in the last eight years. He is now open champion of the United States for the third time, has twice won the British open championship and has been United States amateur champion four times.

In addition to his law practice here, Jones is an official of the Atlanta baseball club, a director of one of the city's great banks, and has numerous other business connections.

Big Six Sluggers Fail on Saturday

Big six batsmen didn't get much of a run for their money yesterday, as two were kept out of action for a rest and a third, Paul Waner, was in just long enough to get one time at bat. Waner, going hitless that one time, dropped to third place again, and the averages in general slid downward. His mark dropped to .402, while Sam Rice, getting one hit in three trips to the plate, fell only one point, to .403.

Babe Ruth led for the day, hitting a double and triple in five times up and registering the day's only gain, one point up to .374.

The other Babe, Herman, hit once in four tries and lost five points from his first place average.

The standing:

GENE COOK LOW ON NEW COURSE AT EAST LAKE

Golfers Try Out New 18-Hole Layout—Burton Wins at Druid Hills.

Gene Cook, former Georgia amateur golf champion, with a 76, was medalist Saturday afternoon at East Lake country club in the opening of the new 18-hole course. More than 75 golfers took advantage of an opportunity to play on the new course.

Since his score was the lowest for the day, Cook's 76 is naturally the course record at present but he was not far in the lead as Charlie Yates, one of the club's youngest players and Berrien Moore, Jr., former club champion, were second low with 77 each.

Carlton Y. Smith, former southern single tennis champion, Angus Perkerson, Howard Bridges and Jack Pappenheimer composed the first foursome that played over the new course. They made reservation for "first" several months ago and started out shortly after 12 o'clock. Smith was medalist in the first foursome with an 80.

Cook's foursome started out shortly before 1 o'clock and all four players turned in scores of 80 or better. Cook was low with 76, Moore was second with 77, P. G. Hanahan was next with a 78 and Scott Hudson, Jr., was fourth with an 80. Hudson is present champion at East Lake.

Although some of the new holes are "snaps" for good golfers, there is plenty of trouble on the course. Par for the layout is 71. The majority of scores Saturday ranged between 85 and 100.

Cook has always been a consistent long driver and it was due to his accuracy from the tee that enabled him to set the course record.

Scores on each of the holes were considerably varied. Very few birdies were made during the afternoon. Young Hudson is the proud possessor of a birdie made on the long dog leg par five 11th hole. Practically every Saturday golfer required seven or eight strokes but Hudson's drive and second shot were true with plenty of distance. His third was well on the green and he dropped a long putt for a birdie while his three mates each required seven and eights.

The new course will be open for play during the remainder of the summer and plans will be made for a formal opening after Jones returns from England.

Burton Wins At Druid Hills.

J. Q. Burton shot an unusually good round of golf Saturday afternoon and won the low net prize in Class A of a one-day handicap tournament staged by Harry Stephens at Druid Hills. Burton shot a 79 and with an 18-stroke handicap, his low net was 61. Second place honors in Class A were shared equally between Wilmer Davis and Powers Pace with a 67 each. Davis had a gross of 85, less 18 strokes, and Pace had an 83, with 16 strokes off. Third place honor was won by H. H. Ellison with an 87, minus 18, a net of 69.

Class B was won by Dr. S. T. Brown with a gross of 91, minus 28 handicap strokes, giving him a net of 63. A. C. Bromberg and T. M. Barnwell each had a net of 64 for second place, and R. H. Dobbs and J. S. Settle shared third place honors with nets of 66 each.

The full handicap applied and those players from 1 to 18 strokes were grouped in Class B, with 19 to 28 handicap strokes in Class B. Burton went to the club with no intention of playing a round, but after Stephens offered him a set of clubs he went out and won a prize.

Atlanta Pros Ready for Tourney.

Seven Atlanta professional golfers will leave the city early this week for Nashville, Tenn., where they will participate in the annual Southeastern Professional Golfers' Association tournament over the Richland Country Club course. Play will start Thursday and 36 holes will be played on Thursday and the remaining 36 Friday.

Jimmy Livingstone, of Ingleside Country Club, will leave tonight and will spend several days with a brother in Nashville prior to the tournament.

Billy Wilson, of Piedmont park; Tommy Wilson, of Ansley park, and Albert Jones, of West End, will leave together Wednesday night.

Howard Beckett and Willie Livingstone, of Capital City Country Club, will leave Monday night in time to get in a day of practice before the pro-amateur match, which will be played Wednesday. Frank Ball, of East Lake Country Club, will leave Tuesday night, along with Beckett and Livingstone.

Charlie Hall, of Birmingham, present titleholder, is president of the association and will call an executive committee meeting during the tournament. Howard Beckett is a former president of the association.

Morris Brown Plans Barn-Storming Tour

Arthur Miller, well-known colored financier, will manage the Morris Brown All-Stars this summer in their campaign to remodel the Morris Brown athletic field. The entire Morris Brown baseball outfit that played havoc throughout the season with their sensational slugging and fielding will be in the lineup. Cotton, a former Morris Brown student, who has just finished his studies at South Carolina State and considered the best outfielder in college baseball among his race, will contribute his services to the purple and black cause.

They will open their season Wednesday with the Atlanta Cubs, a local aggregation on the Morris Brown athletic field. After their series the All-stars will begin a road trip that will carry them to all the leading cities of the state.

Their home games will be announced shortly. The management stated that at all the home games sections will be reserved for white people. This team is said to be the greatest colored crew ever assembled in Atlanta.

Players who have already agreed to participate in the campaign are Bradley, star pitcher, and Austin, who are the two hurlers who will be called upon to carry the pitching burden. Two other southpaws will be added to the squad shortly. Thompson, Ray, Pearson, Moore, Reeves, Maxwell, "Tiny" Smith, Hadley, Alexander and Cotton are others on the roster.

Millard S. Duncan, secretary of the All-stars, may be reached at Morris Brown University, phone Walnut 1933, by those wishing to book games with the famous aggregation.

Carrollton Plans Pennant-Raising

CARROLLTON, Ga., May 31.—(AP)—The Carrollton club, champions of the Georgia-Alabama league, will raise its 1929 pennant Monday with appropriate ceremonies. Carrollton won the title last year in a play-off with Lindale. It also won the pennant in 1928.

The game Monday will be between Carrollton and Lindale.

The local club is strong again this year, and the race has developed into a three-cornered affair between Carrollton, Lindale and Cedartown. Huntsville, Ala., also is showing strongly

L. H. Carre, president of the league, will present the attendance cup to Carrollton at the ceremonies Monday.

ATLANTA CLUBS TO PLAY HOSTS

North Georgia Golf League Matches Set for Today.

Three Atlanta golf clubs will be hosts to visiting teams at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon in the opening of the North Georgia Golf league. Ansley Park, champions of the circuit last year, will open with West End on the West End-L. & N. course.

Ingleside, the new local entry this year, will be hosts to Rome Country Club, another new entry, and Forrest Hills will play Marietta on the Forrest Hills course.

The schedules are dated for Saturday, but the date will be optional with the clubs for either Saturday afternoon or Sunday afternoon.

The matches will be played in foursomes and the Nassau scoring system will be used.

All of the teams, with the exception of Ingleside and Marietta, will consist of 12 players. A limited membership at Marietta and Ingleside makes it hard for the team captain to select 12 representative players and the league voted to use only eight players when those two teams were interested.

Ansley Park will defend its title with another strong team, consisting of Dr. Dan Sage, H. C. Nowell, Ed Ansley, Johnny Green, J. J. Jones, Jr., R. L. Nichols, Johnny Welch, C. R. Perry, Tom Huntt, L. A. Foster, Muggsy Smith and H. R. Wagar.

Marietta and Forrest Hills will have two strong teams pitted against each other today. Marietta will pin its hopes on Morgan, Frank, and "Bubber" McNeel, Bill Dupree, William Daniel, and E. Thomas, while Forrest Hills will be represented by Bee Griffin, Tom Stewart, John Rembert, Johnny Byrne, John Cunyers, William Arwood and George Rudolph.

Captain Billy Kingdon, of the Ingleside club, stated Saturday his team will be selected from Frank and M. A. Ferst, Edwin and Herman Haas, Herman and L. Harris, Walter Wolff, George Kohn and himself.

The Rome team will be Leon Covington, Jennings Gordon, Will McWilliams, Charlie Warner, Sr., J. S. Backman, Oscar Cone, Joe Sulzbacker and Dr. Carl Betts.

Ansley Park Takes Lead.

Ansley Park went into the lead of the pro-amateur golf league Friday afternoon with a 3-2 victory over West End on the Ansley Park course. Tommy Wilson, Ansley Park pro, and Johnny Green, his amateur partner, had a best ball of 68, while Albert Barnes, the West End pro, and Pete Barnes, had a best ball of 70. No individual scores were kept as the players picked up after a hole had been won or lost.

WHICHONE LAYS CLAIM TO TITLE AFTER VICTORY

Great Horse, Great Rider Team To Capture Withers.

By Orlo Robertson,
Associated Press Sports Writer.

BELMONT PARK RACE TRACK, May 31.—(AP)—A great horse with a great rider laid claim to the three-year-old championship today as Harry Payne Whitney's Whichone with Sonny Workman in the saddle won the historic Withers stake and $26,150.

Showing championship form, the brilliant colt which last year won the juvenile title, came from behind in the stretch after overcoming early interference, to outclass a field of five rivals by four lengths. Trailing the Whichone-Workman combination in second place was Walter J. Salmon's Swinfield while another length back followed Franke Brown's Starpatic.

SANDE FOURTH.

Earl Sande, mounted on W. R. Coe's Maya, was fourth with Black Majesty, also carrying the green and white polka dot silks of the Coe stable, fifth, and Mrs. Graham Fair Vanderbilt's Sarazen sixth and last. Caruso Kai Fing and Dunsany were scratched.

A crowd of 20,000 fans witnessed the triumph of Whichone with only a mild cheer as the son of Chile-Flying Witch went to the post at the almost unbelievable odds of 1 to 10, the second shortest odds in the 55 years of the running of the classic mile. Man O' War was quoted at 1 to 30 in his 1930 triumph when he stepped the mile in 1:45 4-5 a new American record at the time. Whichone went the distance today in 1:38 1-5 over a track rated as good.

Workman was forced to show his best brand of riding to outclass the field, as Sande and Inzelone on the Coe entry, teamed together to all but shut Whichone out of the running in the early stages of the race. The Whitney entry broke fifth in line while Black Majesty and Maya were away from the pole like streaks of greased lightning.

BURNING PACE.

With Black Majesty setting a burning pace, Workman found himself in second place on the rail with Sande on Maya a close third and on the outside. Workman endeavored to swing Whichone out of the pocket on the far turn but Black Majesty was eating up the turf with a speed that sent him past the six furlong pole in 1:11-4-5.

Unable to get clear, Workman went to the whip, sent Whichone to the outside, as the field swung into the stretch and in a few swift strides, the light blue and brown topped silks were out in front with the race in hand. Swinfield and Starpatic came up fast but Workman just sat still in the saddle, content to let Whichone gallop past the judges' stand, an easy winner by four lengths. He finished out the mile and a quarter in 2:06 in preparation for the Belmont stakes to be run next Saturday, in which he will meet the Preakness and Kentucky Derby winner, Gallant Fox.

Rivalry for Batting Laurels Reaches Boiling Point in Southern

GEORGE DETORE HOLDS GRIMLY TO SLIM EDGE

Hutcheson Boosts Mark 60 Points To Take Second Honors.

Rivalry for the batting honors in the Southern association has reached the boiling point, with George Detore, of New Orleans, on top of the point and several other sluggers struggling to push him off. Detore is slapping the ball at a clip of .411. Hutcheson, boosting his average some 60 points during last week, has forged into second place with a .410, one point back of Detore. Tommy Taylor, of New Orleans, comes in for third place with a .406, while Jay Partridge, of Nashville, is holding a .399 for fourth place.

Sunny Jim Poole, batting .398, holds the runs-batted-in lead, having batted in a total of 57 runs for the Vols. Poole also holds the home run lead, 12. Poole's teammate, Partridge, is second in the home run bustin' business, having poled out 10.

Flashkamper, Memphis shortstop, is the leading base stealer. The speedy Chick has swiped 15.

Memphis sets the pace in team batting, .308. Three clubs are tied for second place at .305. New Orleans and Nashville are knotted for the fielding honors, .966 each. New Orleans is given the lead by close figures, Chattanooga's keystone combination has turned the most double plays, 57.

Shepherd has pitched the Chicks to five victories without a loss. Six other flingers have perfect records, but have not participated in as many games as the Chick ace.

CARDS, ROBINS HOLD HOT RACE AS CUBS CRACK

Waner and O'Doul Battle for National Bat Honors.

The Dodgers and the revived Cardinals staged a pretty race during the last week. The Redbirds lost but one contest while winning five, and the Robins won four and lost two. A half game separates the contenders. The champions' wobbly pitching, together with the inability of Hornsby to play anywhere near his true form, made it a hard week for the Cubs who managed to win three of six games. The sudden death of Hal Carlson imposes another heavy handicap on the distressed Bruins.

Manager McGraw is getting ready for a midsummer rush. The acquisition of Critz, Donohue and Allen should help the Giants, who need bolstering if they are to compete with St. Louis and Brooklyn.

Though Players Sherlock, Lucas, Fisher and Stephenson top the list of individual batters in the order named, none of them are in their respective lineups regularly and the real individual leader at this time is Paul Waner, who, by the simple process of making five hits in 15 times up, passed Babe Herman, who made six hits in 19 times at bat. Waner's season mark is .405 and Herman's .404. O'Doul, Terry and Flowers follow in the order named.

Babe Herman leads in runs scored, 39, and in total bases, 100; Johnny Frederick in hits, 63; Frisch in doubles, 19; Cuyler and English in three-baggers, 6 each, L. Wilson in home runs, 13; Bartell in sacrifices, 10; Cuyler in stolen bases, 11, and L. Wilson in runs batted in, 40.

Brooklyn and St. Louis are tied in team batting, .326, while Cincinnati leads in team fielding with an average of .980.

Luque and Haines have each pitched 40 innings and have won four games each, being still undefeated, while Brame, with 49 innings pitched, has won five and lost one. Seibold, of Boston, Chicago cast-off, has hurled nine 9-inning games, winning seven and losing two. McCarthy could use him.

Including Games of Thursday, May 29.

Gallant Fox and Whichone Meet in Belmont Stakes Saturday

WHITNEY ENTRY IS FAVORITE AT EVEN MONEY

Distance May Worry "the Fox" Rival for Season's Honors.

By George Daley.

NEW YORK, May 31.—William Woodward's Gallant Fox, and H. P. Whitney's Whichone, are moving up to the Belmont stakes next Saturday and the horse race of the century in prime condition. The field will be small but no others are needed to make this battle for gold and glory to racing what the Dempsey-Tunney battle was to boxing.

One or the other will move into the golden circle among those winning $200,000 or over—a circle now confined to just eight horses. With six starters—hardly more will face the barrier—the Belmont will be worth $82,000 in round figures and the winner's share will be all of $70,000. The prize is none too fair for such a horse race.

James Butler's Questionnaire, E. R. Bradley's Buckeye Poet, W. R. Coe's Caruso and C. V. B. Cushman's New Broom, the $75,000 yearling of 1928 and still a maiden, may accept the issue, but they, or such others which go out, are little more than forlorn hopes striving for the consolation prize of $3,000 for third and $1,000 for fourth.

SECOND MONEY.

Incidentally second money will be worth $7,500 and one of the outsiders might step into this if Whichone or Gallant Fox is killed off by the pace of the other.

My faith in Gallant Fox still is strong. He proved his speed, courage and stamina in winning the Wood Memorial, the Preakness and the Kentucky Derby in quick succession and $117,800. Since the colorful race at Churchill Downs, which was little more than a sharp exercise gallop, he has had a slight respite and just enough work to keep him on edge. The historic Withers was sacrificed to save the strain of too much racing and he goes up to the mile and a half of the Belmont as fit as the hands and skill of Jimmy Fitzsimmons can make him.

Whichone, winner of the Futurity last September when he came from behind to beat Mi-Jack, Gallant Fox and Boojum among others, has had a long and careful preparation under the eyes of Tom Healey, the master conditioner.

WHICHONE READY.

Whichone's readiness for the approaching test of those qualities which make for greatness in a horse was established last Wednesday when he beat Xenofol and Houssain in his first start of the season and just galloped the mile in 1:37 with the fractions being fast and even all the way, the quarter in 23 4-5 seconds, the half in 47 seconds. He could have run the mile in 1:36 or better and he carried 126 pounds. That established his high speed and his readiness.

The only question left is his ability to go a distance. The sons of Chicle have not been noted as stayers but Whichone may be the exception. His followers are accepting that on faith. He now is the favorite at even money.

The Belmont stakes race is a real derby in fact, if not in name. It is fashioned after England's classic and is a true counterpart. It is the race most desired by owners, breeders and trainers—not only for the value but also for the prestige which victory brings. With exceptions here and there the winners have gone on to produce their own kind and this cannot be said with the same freedom for the Kentucky Derby or any other race.

GREAT RACE.

The race was named after the father of the late August Belmont and is a monument to the memory of one of the early builders of American racing. It was first run in 1867 when Ruthless won and it is eight years older than the Kentucky Derby. No race is so steeped in turf traditions or has more behind it.

Recent winners include Sir Barton, Man o' War, Grey Lag, Zev, American Flag, Crusader, Chance Shot, Vito and Blue Larkspur—good horses all and most of them great horses. Either Whichone or Gallant Fox is deserving of a place in the list.

Lasting turf history was written when George D. Widener's Jack High, tossed into the Metropolitan handicap under 110 pounds, set up a competitive record of 1:35 for one mile a few days ago. This amounts to a world's record for a circular track.

Racing fanciers still are discussing the amazing performance which may not be discredited even if some of the private timers made it fractionally slower. Jack Joyner, his trainer stopped his watch at 1:35 1-5 and few more accurate timers ever lived.

IN ENGLAND.

Over in England three horses are credited with running the mile over a straight course in 1:32 4-5. In this country Roamer hung up 1:34 4-5 against time with a pace maker with 110 pounds up over the Saratoga track. Jack High's time in competition is the more creditable.

Incidentally Mrs. Charles Amory's Balko, winner of the Toboggan handicap, gave Jack High a great race under 120 pounds. He went to the half mile in the surprising time of 45 1-5 seconds and to the six furlongs in 1:10 2-5, little short of flying. In spite of this killing pace he hung on to be second.

It is an interesting fact that Jack High is the first horse ever trained by Jack Joyner to go into the silver circle of horses winning $100,000 or over. In the past he has handled such stars of the turf as Ethelbert, Fair Play, Waterboy, Hamburg Belle, Tradition and Whisk Broom II to mention only a few. Jack High's total now amounts to $106,490.

WHITNEY ENTRY.

H. P. Whitney's Equipoise proved himself a colt of quality when he took up 125 pounds and came from behind to win the juvenile stakes and $15,400 on Tuesday. The son of Pennant-Swinging was not highly considered as a yearling and was consigned to Mr. Whitney's second string. He could have been bought last fall for $5,000 and now has earned $24,825, which would have been $10,000 more if he had not been disqualified after winning the youthful stakes at Jamaica.

The field for the juvenile was unusually small for such a rich prize. Happy Scot showed class in being beaten only half a length in a hard drive after forcing most of the pace. Samuel Ross refused an offer of $50,000 for this colt three weeks ago and made no mistake in turning away from the temptation.

The leading two-year-olds to date appear to be Equipoise, Happy Scot and Vander Pool. None of the others so far have made a deep impression. The death of Mrs. Graham Fair Vanderbilt's Chouette again is cause for regret. We may see something worth while in the national stallion stakes of $30,000 next Saturday.

Two Rallies Win For Whittier, 4-3

Fulton Helpless as Game Is Tied in Ninth and Won in Twelfth.

Three thousand rabid baseball fans saw a 12-inning game at the Fulton Bag diamond on Fair street Saturday when Whittier Mills won from Fulton Bag and Cotton Mills, 4 to 3.

Whittier usually wins a game like this in the ninth, but this time they were one behind and could only tie it in the ninth inning. After batting around one more time, Whittier finally put over the last run just as darkness cast its first shadows over the diamond.

Ford and Osborne both pitched fine games. Each fanned 12 opponents and Osborne contributed a hit. Dowda and Moreland each got two hits for the winners and Whitney made two for the losers.

EXPOSITION WINS.

Exposition Mills won a ball game from Southern Bell in easy style, 19 to 1, Saturday. No box score was kept.

S. R. WINS, 8-7.

Southern Railway had a hard time beating Hapeville at Candler field Saturday, but finally came in the winner, 8 to 7. The game was full of double plays, six of them being pulled in all. Carter, Richardson and Whitley figured in three of them, and Carter made one unassisted for Southern Railway. For Hapeville, Hornsby to Osborne to Whaley was the route taken twice. Carter also starred at bat, getting three out of five.

It took an extra inning to win the game. Southern came up in the ninth one short and made just enough to keep them in the game. It was 7-all when the inning was over. Four errors by Hapeville helped the Railroaders win the victory.

SLUGGING HELPS.

Norcross won a good game from Stone Mountain, 10 to 5, at Norcross, Saturday afternoon. Matthews, hurling for Stone Mountain, was not able to evade the big bats of the home team. Rhodes started the first inning by doubling with three men on bases. Matthews had walked two men and Carlyle singled. Rochester hurled good ball for seven inning, giving up four hits and no runs.

LITHONIA HOLDS LEAD.

Lithonia still holds the lead in the Granite league, having defeated Woodhaven on the home lot, 3 to 1. Hollingsworth came out of the pinches in fine shape and had good control.

Abbott proved that the ball could be lost on the Lithonia diamond by socking it for a homer to the outskirts in the sixth inning. Hollingsworth allowed eight hits, but retired 11 men via the strike-out route.

EDGEWOOD BAPTIST ROMPS.

The Edgewood Baptist nine romped home to a victory over the East Point Baptist crew, 14 to 7. Hollingsworth, on the mound for Edgewood, was touched heavily in the first three innings, but from then on out he was hard to hit. Edgewood Baptist made a fine rally in the fifth frame to score seven runs, which put the game on ice. The hitting of Roberts and Ward for Edgewood, with four hits in six tries, was the best for Edgewood, while Towns, with three for five, led the East Point hitting attack.

PLAYERS TOO FEW.

Being able to muster only eight players, Westminster Presbyterian was forced to forfeit to Jackson Hill Baptist. This helped Jackson Hill in the standing and made the third straight loss for Westminster.

GRACE ROUTES FOE.

Getting 15 hits for a total of 16 runs, the Grace Methodist nine continued to hang around the top of the league by defeating Mount Olive Baptist, 16 to 1.

Smithy, star twirler for Grace, pitched a fine game, giving up a total of three hits, two to R. Garner and one to Newsome. The Mount Olive boys were unable to do anything with Smithy.

Joe McCrorey, of basketball fame, was the leading swatter of the day, getting four hits in five trips. Two double plays, one by each side, were the fielding features.

Gordon Street Presbyterian defeated the Druid Hills Presbyterian team, 9 to 5, to keep the undisputed lead of the American S. S. A. A.

As the score sheet was not turned in, report is incomplete. Whitney, on the mound for Gordon Street, struck out 13 Druid Hills batters. Bohler and McCrary hit home runs for Gordon Street.

Atlanta League

UPSET HURTS.

One of the first upsets of the season in the Atlanta league took place Saturday when Ruralist Press found Southern Spring Bed Company off of guard and took a 5-to-4 win. Hammock, pitching for the Spring Bedders, was on edge for the game, but his mates' errors lost the game. Hammock struck out 15 men and allowed 10 hits.

There were two pretty double plays in the game. Wilkie did some fine batting, getting four hits out of five times up, two of them doubles.

Lefty King, first baseman for Fisher, tripled with three men on bases and got three hits out of three times up. H. Kemp also made three out of five. 6 SLUGGERS HAVE DAY.

Georgia Duck defeated Clarkston in a game full of hits, 13 to 10. Clarkston took the lead in the first inning by scoring six runs. Things looked easy for them then, but Hammond came to bat and tripled in the fourth inning with the bases loaded, and this put the Ducks one ahead of the visitors. Clarkston took the lead again in the seventh, but the Ducks matched it again in the eighth, scoring six runs, enough to win by a margin of three. Kindall hit a home run with the bases loaded this time. Martin hit a home run the first time he came to bat for the Ducks. T. Hensley and B. Hensley, of Clarkston, both hit homers. R. Boyd, for the Ducks, went over the dump in center field and caught one from the bat of Yancey, then threw him out at the plate, for it was out of the sight of the umpire. Hammond took the box in the ninth and struck out three men after Clarkston's first man had made a triple.

other friends will go immediately to Paris for a good time. Bobby will not touch a golf club seriously until just before the British open, June 16 to 18, at Hoylake.

He plans to return there two or three days ahead of time and practice a few rounds. Then he will sail for America to arrive in New York, July 3. Thence he will proceed immediately to Hopkins, Minn., where the United States open will be played July 10, 11 and 12.

So not before the middle of July will he return to Atlanta. His last of four major golf offensives will be in September when the national amateur championship will be held at the Merion Cricket Club, Philadelphia.

IS THE HAZARD CURED?

I was curious to learn what Big Bob Jones' analysis of the big problem in Bobby's game might be—that of whether Bobby had or could overcome his mental hazard at the 18-hole match test.

It seemed that with his close triumphs over Cyril Tolley, Jimmy Johnston and George Voigt the nervousness might be entirely cured.

Big Bob does not know for sure. He thinks probably not—not yet.

"From following the detail of his match with Voigt I could see that Rob was sparring cautiously," he said. "Bernard Darwin in The Constitution said both men seemed afraid of each other and were palpably nervous. That must have been the case.

"But did you notice that when he was two down and five to play, he quit sparring and began to fight? He concentrated on his shots; he forgot to be bothered by the shortness of the match; he gave the game all he had and it was the other man who cracked.

"It may be gone and it may not. Rob has sense enough to know that an 18-hole match is no real test of golf and he cannot forget that truth."

DON'T SAY HE WON'T.

What are Bobby's chances in the three remaining tournaments on his program?

Dispatches from overseas quote Bobby as saying "nothing else matters." Naturally he would say that in a moment when his nerves are frayed and his body worn by eight successive matches, three of them extremely close.

But there is no reason why the success should not react in exactly the opposite way on his game. There is no telling where he will go from here. There has been so much talk about Bobby's chances to win all four championships that he may feel like winning them.

When he comes to the tee in the British open, in the United States open and in the United States amateur he will be refreshed by a rest and keen for golf again. Nothing can quench that inborn competitive instinct with which the man is so gifted.

It is a lot to expect of any one man. The ordinary laws of golf forbid it.

But what is Bobby Jones but the noblest outlaw of the grand old game—the king bandit of them all. Why shouldn't he win three more?

ENGELS LOSE TO CRACKERS

There were some of the writing boys who might have criticised Wild Bill Rogers for taking him out but they said, "Well, Bill has had right good luck beating the Crackers this year and maybe he knows what he is doing."

DEATH VALLEY.

And it seemed that he did for Luke Appling stayed right there at third base where so many Crackers have died. Third base is a sort of death valley for the Crackers. The bones of Cracker base runners who have been left to perish at second base are stacked many feet deep.

Art Decatur struggled through the eighth and went well into the ninth before disaster overtook him.

The Crackers were in high, good humor. They had never beaten the Lookouts and they took the Saturday victory as an omen of good luck—a breaking of the jinx that has hounded them all year.

WILL GET GOING.

"We'll get going now," was the theme song of the Crackers as they dressed and got ready to board a train for Nashville where they have two games today.

It was a tough ball game. The Crackers scored first. Roy Grimes got a single in the second, advanced on an infield out and scored on Luke Appling's single to center.

You will find Luke Appling credited with two errors. He had them. But the boy played a great game. He is not familiar with third base. Short is his spot.

PLENTY OF HITS.

He got two hits, a single and a triple. That triple was an epic. It went high. The boys at the telephones in the press box were starting in saying, "Appling flied to Bigelow." Then they saw that the ball was still going. It seemed to hang at one level and keep traveling. And beneath it Elliott Bigelow pounded the earth like one of Dunsaney's gods of the mountains who had stone feet and made the earth rumble as they ran. He could get nowhere under it and the ball came sliding down to earth for a triple. It might have been a home run but they played safe. He was left to die at third, which was a pity. His single, however, scored a run.

Red Barron handled two balls well in left field. He hasn't seen any pitching this year and hasn't started yet at bat but he will.

Chattanooga scored in the third to tie the count. Both clubs got over tallies in the sixth. The Lookouts pushed one more in home in the seventh.

CRACKERS GET STARTED.

Jack Sheehan's second double of the game started the Crackers off to tying the score in the eighth.

And then came that ninth. And good old Climax's lick that broke the jinx.

Admiral Joe Engel was moaning after the game. "I know I am a bit hoggish," he said, "but I wanted that game. I needed it."

But not as much as the Crackers. They open a double-header in Nashville today.

Dobbs' New Lineup Hushes 'Wise Boys'

Late Reports From Spiller Field Show Great Crop of Youngsters.

By Ralph McGill.

Those who were accusing John Dobbs of dallying around with a lot of baseball Methuselahs a short time ago must revamp their opinions.

For lo, and likewise behold, if John Dobbs hasn't got more genuine youth on his ball club than any of the other managers. If the former critics were correct in that John Dobbs was cheating the grave then b'gosh if he isn't now robbing the perambulators.

Johnny Dobbs has Hugh Starling, fresh from the classrooms at the University of Alabama, on his pitching staff. Hugh Starling is very likely to become one of the stellar flingers of this circuit before Johnny Dobbs is finished.

HELLO, 'FESSOR.

At third base John Dobbs has Luke Appling, who just a few days ago was answering "present" at his Oglethorpe classes.

In the outfield Johnny Dobbs has David Irenus (The Original Red) Barron, not just a kid any longer but still one of the youngsters of baseball.

Behind the plate there is Freddie Polvogt. Freddie Polvogt has not been attending any college classes. He has been in baseball for several seasons but he is still a youngster with his future before him.

And Johnny Dobbs isn't finished yet. He is going ahead with plans to annex more young players.

Not only has John Dobbs got more genuine youth on his club than any of the others; but one has only to look at the league once or maybe twice to see that the boys had a lot of old-fashioned gall in poking fun at the Cracker director.

NOT SO YOUNG.

The Southern association isn't youthful anywhere. There may have been a time when it was the incubator for the major leagues, sending up baseball fledglings each year. But not any more. It is a league of face wrinkles that no skin lotion can make appear young.

There is just one other young catcher in the league among the first string group. That's Gilly Campbell, who wears the windpad and mask for Doc Prothro at Memphis. The others are grizzled veterans such as Pete Lapan, Ernie Kreuger, Eddie Kenna, Ralph Minetree, Don Anderson and several others who might be mentioned.

John Dobbs and Larry Gilbert are the only pilots with young third basemen. New Orleans has Detore, one of the real stars. Dobbs has Appling. Joe Klugman was third basing for Nashville until he broke his leg Friday. John Chapman, at Mobile, was with Sherman when he raided Atlanta. Doc Prothro has been at it for years. Pickering, Strohm, Gooch and Tommy Taylor are all past the "young" period. They shave regularly.

SPRING AND FALL.

There are three or four young shortstops. Montague, Marquardt, Eddie Taylor and Yeargin are young enough, but Johnny Jones, Flashkamper, Buck Redfern and Bobby Lamotte have been past the legal voting age for some time.

Second base finds Bill Black, Jack Sheehan, Jay Partridge, Dutch Hoffman and others of that vintage busy at work. Only Nicolai and Dashiell look young enough to go traveling back to the majors again and they have already had their trials once.

Only Zeke Bonura can lay claim to youth in the list of first basers. Jim Poole, Guy Sturdy, Red Russell, Tex Jourdan, Frank Brazil and Roy Grimes are not wearing any rompers save their baseball rompers. Mule Shirley isn't so old, but Mule has been around a lot.

The outfield with Jimmy Horn, Frank Luce, Elliott Bigelow, Toy Carlyle, Jeanes, Mathews, Taitt, Eichrodt and quite a few others of similar experience, boasts Frank Waddey, Red Zarron, Hutcheson and Stumpf as youngsters.

ONE REASON.

And that may be one reason why the league is so much faster this year. There is more experience in the league than it has ever had before.

The boys make fewer mistakes, play smarter baseball and make it all appear natural, mechanical and a bit dull. Which is the main criticism of experience. It does not do things in a sprightly fashion. Not often, anyhow.

Johnny Dobbs thinks the Southern association is at least one-third faster than it has ever been before. That is a very substantial increase.

The increase in tempo fooled a lot of managers. They built for an ordinary year and got a hot one, and only those who were lucky with replacements and the breaks were able to stagger out in front.

SAYS JOE.

Joe Engel, of Chattanooga, who has been scouting the Southern association for years, also thinks it is much faster.

"There are so many veteran players here this year that they are playing ball that would win in the AA leagues," he said. "This league is as fast as a AA league, anyhow. And this year, with about 85 per cent of the players former major league players or players with long experience in Class A leagues, the play has speeded up immensely.

"There isn't a bad ball club in the league. They may look like it at times, but there isn't a weak club.

"The race should be the greatest ever. It isn't settled yet by a long shot."

Peachtree Christian lost to the 20th Century nine by a 13-to-7 score. Each team got 12 hits but the pitching of Tucker for the winners won the game. Brown, Lemon and Hudgins backed up the pitchers with a home run each for the Century boys. For the losers, Tinsley, hit three out of five, one of them for a triple. Dobbins and Green for the losers hit two out of three. Five miscues by the losers proved costly.

Neither team scored for the first four innings, the batteries working in perfect order for both teams. In the fifth inning Park Street broke through and scored one run; but holding Calvary to a nothing score for the first five innings. With the beginning of the sixth inning, the Calvary nine made a rally and won the game.

The Grant Park-Pattillo Me. game belonged to neither team until the sixth inning, and then there was plenty of chance for worry on the part of the Grant Park nine. Grant Park pulled out at 7-4. Neither team scored for the first three innings, both scored one run in the fourth, but it was not until the sixth inning that Grant Park gained a small lead that they maintained through the balance of the game. Camp, of the Grant Park nine, proved himself to be the best hitter, by knocking one two-base and one three-base hit. Gardner, Woodward, F. Camp and Towery made successful base steals.

The Central nine seemed to be up in the air all through the game. Only three players had a perfect record, the other six made from one to three errors. Chopin, of the Central team, did the best hitting for his team by hitting one three-base hit, and one home run. Dodge Eights Selected In Police Tryouts

SACRAMENTO, Cal., May 31.—A more modern and practical form of competitive test has been evolved by the California state department of motor patrol to measure the mettle of men and motor cars used in running down the hard-driving, quick-shooting modern bandit and gangster. Instead of clearing off and measuring a paved stretch over which to put prospective new patrol cars through their paces, all automobiles are now tested at high speed on a main highway during peak traffic periods—the exact conditions under which they do most of the important work of apprehending lawbreakers on the highways.

As a result of a recent series of tests under this plan an order for 10 Dodge Brothers Eight-in-Line coupes was placed by the motor patrol department. Each competing car was taken out on the highway near Sacramento and driven a measured 10 miles through traffic at the best speed it could maintain. The responsiveness of the car to the wishes of the driver counted as much as the power ability of the motor. All cars were run first against and then with the wind, and graded on an average of the speed made in both directions.

The official motor patrol department records show that the Dodge Eight-in-Line averaged 84 miles an hour running with the wind and 71 miles an hour against the wind, an average for both directions of 77.5 miles an hour. Stop watches, instead of the speedometers on the cars, were used to check the time. The Dodge Eights, it is said, were chosen solely on the basis of their satisfactory performances. Although the call for bids expressly specified cars without rumble seats, all Dodges selected have rumble seats—the only cars out of 81 in state motor patrol work with that equipment.

In their reports on the test, motorcycle officers who followed the cars as observers stated that the flexibility of the motor, the responsiveness of the four-wheel hydraulic brakes and the roadability due to lower center of gravity were the main factors in enabling the Dodge to qualify for the exacting requirements of motor patrol work, in spite of the objections to rumble seats.

Americans Urged To Tour Own Country First

If all the Americans who plan to visit Europe on pleasure trips this summer would tour the United States by automobile instead they would contribute well over half a billion dollars to our notional prosperity besides gaining for themselves a first-hand knowledge of the vastness and beauty of their own country.

This is the opinion of H. M. Stephens, general sales manager of the Cadillac Motor Car Company. He points out that:

"An enormous amount of money is spent each year by American tourists who visit foreign lands. Many of these people know little or nothing of our great American continent, except the immediate community in which they may happen to live.

"Great benefit will be derived by such people if they plan to visit sections of this vast United States which are unfamiliar or unknown to them. A broader knowledge of the problems confronting various sections of the country would be gained—a better understanding of the dependence of one section of the country on other sections—the interchange of trade and commodities and the necessity of cooperation bewteen the states for the national good.

"A half billion dollars, the amount spent by American tourists abroad in a normal season, if spent in seeing this country would be of great assistance in improving our national prosperity.

"It would benefit every class of trade and practically every community would share in improved prosperity because every section has some outstanding feature to offer the tourist.

"There are at the present time more than three million miles of highways in the United States. Stretching in a wide-fling network over the 48 states are paved and charted routes which enable tourists from any part of the country to visit any other part of the country easily and quickly.

"Then, too, the automobile has long ago become a most luxurious, safe and flexible mode of transportation for either long or short journeys.

"There is no section of the United States which does not have scenic beauties and historic backgrounds which are well worth visiting. Perhaps no other country in the world can offer the traveler such an infiinte variety of scenery, and backgrounds of such richly varied historic interests.

"The New England states, for example, offer mountains, lakes and valleys, a seacoast of unexcelled beauty and a thousand and one locations bound up with the early history of our country.

"In sharp contrast to this are the western states, reminiscent of a later but equally stern chapter of our history and the unrivalled nature wonders of the Grand Canyon, Yellowstone National Park, and the Rocky mountains.

"In the south good roads have made it possible to see this great section of our country which is forging ahead at such a rapid rate both industrially and agriculturally.

"The middlewest offers the traveler an opportunity of seeing new citites which have come into greatness in a short period of years, due to the industrial activities in these centers. Large cities which were mere towns a few years ago rival their older sisters of the east.

"The southwest, because of its vast distances, offers a unique interpretation of the enormousness of this great country.

"The northwest and the Pacific coast offer scenic wonders and historic interests which will please and profit every American citizen.

"In the program of President Hoover to relieve the unemployment situation, our system of national highways is already playing an important part. State and local authorities plan to spend $1,600,000,000 for highway improvements in 1930. This is an increase of $250,000,000 over the amount spent during 1929. The bulk of this amount will be spent for the construction and maintenance of highways while the remainder will go for local roads and bridges.

"The accommodations offered tourists by every section of the country are comparable with the best offeder by any other country. Today the small town on the main trunk highway of the country provides excellent hotels and tourist's rests.

"With the dependability of the automobile, and a national system of highways, the greatest of pleasure is easily attainable by those who desire to see this great country.

"Surely, a determination to see America will assist greatly in stabilizing American prosperity, and furthermore, benefit anyone both culturally and educationally."

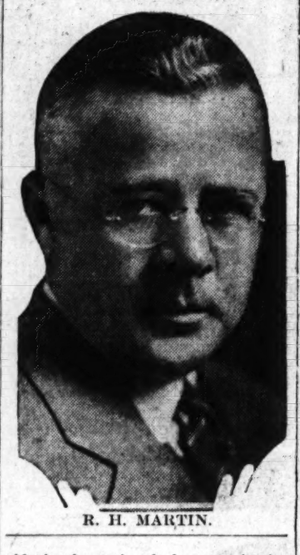

R. H. MARTIN BUYS CADILLAC AGENCY

Franchise Includes Distributorship for State of Georgia.

Announcement is made by F. B. Akers, regional sales manager for the Cadillac Motor Car Company, of the appointment of R. H. Martin, one of the outstanding men in the automobile industry in the south, as distributor for the company in the state of Georgia.

Mr. Martin has purchased the franchise of the Cadillac Company of Atlanta and will take charge of the agency Monday, according to the announcement made by Mr. Akers.

The Cadillac franchise in Atlanta is considered one of the most desirable in the entire dealer organization of the company. It has always been recognized as one of the company's leading points of distribution, and has always been considered among the leaders in the fine car field in Atlanta.

R. H. MARTIN.

Mr. Martin announces that there will be no changes in the present organization of the agency. The entire personnel is to remain intact. The retail sales department is headed by Elwyn Tomlinson, which position he has held for the past 18 months. Harry Hempstead will continue as manager of the used car division, and M. B. Wilkes as service manager.

Mr. Martin is highly pleased at his appointment as Cadillac and LaSalle distributor in Georgia and looks forward to a record business with this line.

Mr. Akers reports that the demand for the V-16 Cadillac has exceeded all expectations of officials of the company. The first production schedule called for the manufacture of 2,500 of these cars for 1930 and already more than 3,000 have been sold. Officials of the factory anticipate now that the production will reach 5,000 by the end of the year.

The Martin agency will have many of the Cadillac and LaSalle models on display in their showrooms all this week, featuring custom bodies and the new V-16.

Seiberling Tire Company Announce New Dealers Here

The Seiberling Rubber Company, makers of Seiberling tires, announce the appointment of three new independent dealers serving motorists of Atlanta with unsurpassed facilities for tire sales and service.

The dealers selected to handle Seiberling products in Atlanta in the future are Miller Service, with service stations at 3070 Peachtree road, N. E., Buckhead and 2161 Peachtree road, N. E.; the West End Tire & Battery Company, with an up-to-date drive-in service station at 774 Gordon street, S. W., and Brooks Shatterly Company, located at 1643 Jonesboro road, Lakewood.

These three independent dealers have combined their purchases of Seiberling tires and have placed an initial order for several carloads of Seiberling tires, some of which have been delivered. In this way they secure the lowest possible factory cost prices and receive absolutely fresh stock direct from Akron.

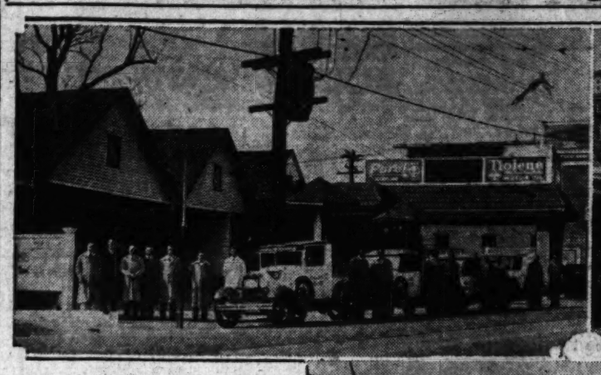

While Seiberling tires usually sell at somewhat higher prices than other tires, carload lot buying by these dealers permit them to offer Seiberling tires at no advance in price over current tire prices, effecting a considerable saving for their customers.

Another feature of their service is their convenient payment plan by which a customer may enjoy Seiberling superlative quality on deferred payments. This is especially appreciated by salaried workers who want the economy of the finest tires, yet may find it inconvenient to pay cash for them. It means they need not buy a cheap tire simply because its price is within their means.

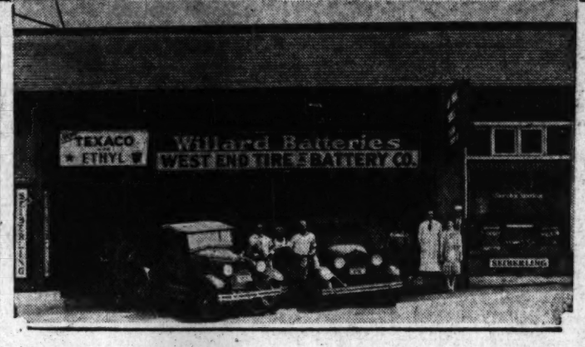

Seiberling tires are noted for their exceptionally long tread wear due to a special affinite tread compound developed and patented by Seiberling engineers. This extra tough compound resists cuts, bites and frictional wear. The flexible carcass construction of Seiberlings makes them a more comfortable tire, while its shape permits a larger tread area to come in contact with the road, insuring greater than average traction and anti-skid. Seiberlings provide easy steering and riding qualities.

The three Atlanta dealers selected are independently owned and operated by local citizens and have been serving Atlanta motorists for a number of years from the same locations. In addition to a complete line of passenger car tires, they will handle both truck and bus sizes, batteries, brake lining, and other auto accessories. Prompt road service can be secured by simply phoning one of these dealers. Should his trucky be engaged at the moment he will get in touch with one of the other two Seiberling dealers and arrange for his truck to answer the call. In this way no time will be lost rendering service in any part of the city or adjacent roads.

Three New Seiberling Dealers Announced

Announcement was made the past week of the appointment of three new Seiberling dealers for Atlanta, to sell and service users in their particular localities. They are, top, left: The Miller Service station and staff at Buckhead, which offers a complete tire, battery and brake service in addition to gas, oil, greasing and washing and Seiberling tires. Top, right: The Brooks-Shatterly store at 1643 Jonesboro road, Lakewood, shows the sales staff before a fresh carload of Seiberling tires just received. Brooks-Shatterly also handle batteries, auto parts and accessories. They have grown from an humble start to an important factor in tire distribution within the past few years. Batam Austin Car To Come To Atlanta

Milton Riley, manager of the Jack Phinizy Motor Company, local Auburn and Cord dealers, announces that the much heralded Austinn Bantam motor car will be display here soon.

The exact date of the first delivery has not been determined, but it is expected to be some time next month. In answer to the queries considered to be of most interest to the motoring public, Mr. Riley says: "This is an American car, the same car that has been produced and operated successfully in England for the past year. The American Austin is the same car in every detail but is built in this country at Butler, Pennsylvania.

"Now, as for some of the advantages of this automobile, it will do 56 miles per hour safely and with exceptional roadability, gets 40 miles to the gallon of gas, and can be operated for 10,000 miles for $56. The wheelbase is 75 inches, which means unusual ease in parking. The bight is about five feet. Tires are 18x3.75, and, of course, this means economy. The Bantam Austin weighs 1,100 pounds, and tires have a long life. Oil is as economical in the Austin as gas, the amount required being two quarts.

"The models will include a sport roadster, a coupe and a special delivery. All models have four-wheel brakes and shock absorbers on all four wheels. A special silent-second transmission allows a speed of up to 40 miles and hour in second gear."

The Jack Phinizy company is distributor for the Austin Bantam in this territory, and Mr. Riley reports that already many dealer contracts have been made through out the state.

Many New Drivers To Result From 500 - Mile Race

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., May 31.—A new group of potential automobile racing drivers who had the grilling experience of going through the smoke and battle of the world's premier automobile race, emerged from the international 500-mile race here today.

These new faces appeared in America's racing lineup as a result of the ruling made by the Indianapolis motor speedway that a mechanic must accompany the driver, thereby bringing back the two-man racing cars to Indianapolis.

The change is one of the most avidly discussed topics in this famous city of automobile racing.

Benefits of the new rules will be great, not only in training race drivers for the future, but in substantially increasing the safety element in the grueling grind, according to E. Waldo Stein, Firestone Tire and Rubber Company racing tire expert, whose knowledge of racing tires is accepted by the drivers and their mechanics as paramount.

Stein has been through the mill. Riding with Barney Oldfield throughout the country for years, Stein has been a driver himself and has been in the game 18 years altogether.

"The mechanics will come out of the race with a judgment of speed, distance and pace that they could never acquire if they had to watch the race from the pits," Stein declared. Judgment of pace, in Stein's opinion, is one of the most valuable things that a racing driver can acquire.

"The driver always wants to check his opponents' speed," Stein asserted. "He must ascertain whether the other driver is going to keep his fast or slow speed up. Wise mechanics will avail themselves of a golden opportunity to learn plenty," Stein told his interviewer.

The tire expert, whose advice is sought constantly by the racing fraternity, believes that the chances for accidents will be greatly lessened this year by the presence of a second man in the car.

"Take the case of Ray Keech in June, 1929, at Altoona. It is believed Ray's attention was distracted for a fraction of a second and that was enough to lose control of the car. This year the mechanic can keep his eye on the other drivers and the driver can confine his attention solely to the wheel."

Romantic Setting Used by Nash for Europe Assembling

KENOSHA, Wis., May 31.—Romantic settings await many American-made automobiles shipped overseas; but few products of busy and matter-of-fact manufacturing plants in this country find themselves in stranger or more historic spots than do the Nash "400" cars which emerge from their sturdy shipping crates in lovely old Genoa, Italy.

These ultra modern mechanical treasures of 1930 come to rest first in a fifteenth century pirates' cove, and are prepared for delivery in the subterranean vaults of the ancient Palazzo Doria, where 500 years ago the Dogi of the dominant Genoese republic heaped the priceless loot taken in their high seas adventures.

Among the most interesting of old world cities, Genoa itself is a rich center for the American globe trotter, and the Palazzo Doria is famed as a jewel of first water in the chain which links its many modern developments with antiquity. The Doria family was at the height of its fame around the year 1400. It gave more than one imperious Doge to the republic, and built a number of the old palaces which are still standing. Only one of these—the actual home of Andrea Doria, head of the fleets of Emperors Francis I and Charles V—is known officially as the Palazzo Doria, and is preserved as a national monument by the Italian government.

The ancient stronghold, situated in the heart of the port of Genoa and contrasting strikingly with the great liners and modern equipment of this largest port in the Mediterranean, is used partially as a dwelling. Some of its chambers have been transformed into business offices, and the lower part, which spreads under garden and driveway, serves as a warehouse for imports. It is here that the Nash distributor utilizes the old vaults and corridors, where once the treasures of Genoese conquests were piled, to receive the new Nash cars when they leave their ships and to prepare them for the showrooms.

The Genoa visitor of today thus finds the historic palaces serving a modern people as it served the ancient state, with priceless Nash developments in modern comfort, speed and mechanical value, replacing the less practical treasures of the middle ages.

Service Important To Motorists Purchasing Tires

"Motorists are beginning to realize that they can simply go into a place and purchase a tire, or, they can buy tire service," says C. C. Mason, Jr., local Goodyear dealer.

"When purchasing an automobile, motorists have learned that it is good business to buy from a company that can give them good repair and upkeep service. Now they also are learning that it is just as important to purchase tires manufactured by a company that can back up their sales with good service.

"The Goodyear Company with its dealers in all parts of America, is in an excellent position to supply service to its tire users and makes a specialty of this important factor of the industry.

"The employes of my organization are taught to analyze the tire needs of our patrons and supply them with the tires best adapted for the conditions in which they will be required to serve. There is a Goodyear tire for every tire need.

"We will mount and inflate our patron's tire; in removing old tires, will clean the rims and will be concerned to see that maximum service is given. We also will be glad at any time to inspect tires and change them from one wheel to another to give the user the most wear possible.

"This service can be depended upon at Goodyear stations everywhere. The Goodyear Company also maintains up-to-date repair schools where dealers and their employes are taught the most modern and efficient methods of repairing all manner of injuries that tires can suffer.

Fleet Completes Six - Month Road Test on U. S. Tires

PHOENIX, Ariz., May 30.—Having rounded out six months of operations on the sunbaked, gritty lava roads adjacent to this city, the tire test fleet of the United States Rubber Company left here last week for Michigan where it will continue operations throughout the summer, returning to Arizona again next fall.

More than 2,300,000 tire test miles had been piled up here since last November, when the fleet arrived, according to William Thompson, fleet manager, and hundreds of experimental tires shipped from the factory at Detroit had been put through tests ranging from a few hundred miles to many thousands.

The drivers' families each year accompany the cars to Phoenix in the fall, reside here during the winter, and return north with the fleet in the spring, living for the remainder of the year in Detroit, where the base of summer operations is at the United States tire plant, so that results may be studied close at hand.

The fleet consists of standard American makes of cars representing every weight and price range. Cars are replaced on an average of every twlve months, and at the time of their replacement will have had 100,000 miles or more on the speedometer, Mr. Thompson said.

Each car undergoes severe abuse at the drivers' hands, for where the motorist seeks to get the most possible mileage out of his tires, the fleet operators aim to bring out any inherent defects in experimental tires in a minimum of time. Each car averages 360 speedometer miles a day, or 1,440 tire miles, and the fleet operates six days a week, 52 weeks a year. For fifteen years the United States Rubber Company has had fleets constantly on the road to test and prove the new tire features developed by the company's experimental engineers, according to Mr. Thompson.

Auto Exports To South America Will Increase

The automobile export trade of the United States with South American countries is firmly established, and while conditions at present are a little below normal, due to political and economic situations of a temporary nature, there is every reason to believe that the United States will retain its ascendency in this field, and that American-made cars will continue to outsell all others in the countries to the south.

This is the opinion of Walter R. Glennie, export sales manager of the Graham-Paige Motors Corporation, who has recently returned after an extended trip through South American countries. Mr. Glennie visited Graham dealers in the principal cities of Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Peru, Paraquay, and Uruguay.

"All through South America there is remarkable evidence that the people are beginning to develop the vast natural resources which surround them," says Mr. Glennie. "In the case of Brazil, there is a steady flow of foreign capital into the country, which has already resulted in a material industrial expansion. Sao Paulo, which is the center of this movement, is one of the fastest growing cities in the world. In Sao Paulo, hydro-electric development, textile, and other industries are rapidly building up and employing labor in manufacturing.

"When road development comes, as it must in the near future, there will be exploitation of vast supplies of natural resources. The desire of the people for higher standards of living has been quickened by motion pictures, the motor car, the press and other influences of modern life. Buying power is rapidly increasing and time is not far off when Brazil will be one of the largest and most important markets in the world, and especially for American motor cars and trucks.

"Reports show that four years ago road development was not considered of prime importance in Brazil. Today, every state in the country has some units under construction, and all have definite programs for future development. The employment of modern road-building machinery is rapidly coming into use, and this factor has changed the costruction policies from roads of an inferior type to modern concrete highways. The 350-mile stretch from Rio De Janeiro to Sao Paulo, the longest single stretch of travelable highway in Brazil, is now under construction, and is the result of the government's interest in good roads. It is reported that a motor car can now be driven between the two cities in 10 hours.

"Another modern concrete road is now under construction from Rio to Petropolis, a distance of about 50 miles. This highway is nearly completed. The trip between these two points is one of surpassing beauty and when these roads are completed, the public will immediately grasp the importance of motor transportation and definite plans for extensions will easily be financed and completed. Motor car sales should increase vastly when these new roads are opened to the public."

The Brazilian people take great pride in the possession of an automobile, Mr. Glennie reports, and prefer to a marked extent the products of American manufacturers to those of European origin. This remains true despite the fact that South Americans generally have a much closer bond of sympathy with Europe than with North America. This results in many of them preferring the culture and products of European countries to those of the United States. Shops in the large cities, buildings, the Parisian clothes of the women, all demonstrate this close connection with European centers of culture, Mr. Glennie says.

"The popularity of American motor cars in South American countries is proof that they come closer to satisfying the desires of the people than any other cars," says Mr. Glennie. "This is one of the fundamental reasons for the sound position of our export trade with these countries, and it is also an assurance that our trade will flourish as the countries themselves develop and flourish."

Intense Public Interest In New, Finer Plymouth

DETROIT, Mich., May 31.—Factory production on the new and finer Plymouth automobile, announced to the public on May 10, has been increased materially to take care of the influx of orders from Chrysler, Dodge Brothers and De Soto dealers throughout the United States, according to a statement authorized by Plymouth factory officials today.

Retail sales to the public during the first week of its display were so far over the original estimate that dealers' May orders at the factory now exceed production schedules by several thousand. It is expected that these unfilled orders will increase considerably before the end of the month.

Chrysler, Dodge Brothers and De Soto dealers report unparalleled interest in the new Plymouth. Wire reports from key cities indicate that record crowds are visiting dealers' showrooms by day and night.

Dallas reports "much interest and enthusiasm in new Plymouth. Have placed additional orders." An enthusiastic wire from Columbus, states "Both dealers and public regard new Plymouth as greatest value on market today. Registrations have doubled since its introduction."

From the west coast come reports of the new Plymouth's reception. "Fine reception. Booked many orders. Extra orders wired today. Rush them," was wired from Seattle, Wash. San Francisco volunteers that "the eagerness of the public to view the new Plymouth and their praise of the new models convince us its reception most favorable."

That the east has been no less enthusiastic is gleaned from the Philadelphia report that the "new Plymouth received most favorably. Great enthusiasm and actual orders."

The south, as represented by Savannah, Ga., observes "the first showing of finer Plymouth well attended and marked increase in sales result. Merchandise like this excelling everything in low-price field being accepted by public in generous manner."

A significant angle to these reports, officials of Plymouth Motor Corporation point out, is that the record crowds visiting dealers' showrooms display a marked interest in the features of the new Plymouth that are exclusive with it in the lowest-price field.

Much interest is being displayed in the new Safety-Steel body. The largest engine with increased power, the four-wheel internal hydraulic brakes and many other mechanical improvements impress early buyers with the car's performance and riding comfort.

Dodge Brothers Name New Truck Executives

Dodge Brothers this week announce three important changes in the executive personnel of the motor truck division. Walter S. Graves becomes director of truck sales, succeeding Howard E. Sneathen, resigned. W. F. Clancy and K. A. Ridenour have been appointed assistant directors of truck sales.

Mr. Graves has been assistant director of truck sales for the past 10 months and a member of the Dodge Brothers' sales organization for the past five years. His truck sales experience has covered all departments of the business—retail, wholesale and factory. Prior to joining Dodge Brothers in 1925 as truck representative in the Columbus (Ohio) district he was wholesale manager for a Dodge dealer. In 1927 he was made truck representative in the San Francisco district, and the following year became district manager at Kansas City, Mo., remaining there until June, 1929, when he joined the factory organization as assistant director of truck sales.

WALTER S. GROVES.

Mr. Ridenour, who will have charge of truck activities in the western states, has been associated with the truck industry since 1914. He joined Dodge Brothers early in 1929 in charge of vocational advertising.

Mr. Clancy will direct truck sales work in the eastern states. He joined Dodge Brothers in 1926 as sales representative in the Columbus district. He served later as truck representative in the Atlanta and Philadelphia districts. In August, 1929, he was appointed assistant director of truck sales in the Stockton zone, with headquarters in Stockton, Cal.

Convertible Coupe Added To The Chrysler Six Line

The addition of a convertible coupe with rumble seat to the new low-priced Chrysler Six line has been announced this week by the Chrysler Sales Corporation. The car, selling at a factory price of $925, brings the total models in this series to six body styles, offered at $795 up, the lowest price range that Chrysler has ever offered a six-cylinder car. The convertible coupe has wood wheels as standard equipment. Wire wheels with spares in the front fender wells are available at additional cost.

The convertible coupe combines the seasonal advantages of a roaster with those of a coupe. The top folds back compactly for open-car driving, and can be quickly and easily adjusted for closed-car driving in unfavorable weather. Chromium plated frames for the door glass afford a smart appearance when the top is back and the door glass up.

Finished in attractive color combinations with confrasting panels and striping, the car presents a striking appearance with its graceful body lines. The seat cushions are upholstered in heavy tan leather, both in the driver's compartment and rumble seat. Rubberized pile fabric, matching the top, is available as special equipment for upholstery at slightly extra cost. All exterior hardware of the car is chromium-plated.

The car is powered with a 62-horsepower engine that has already proved its high performance standards in thousands of Chrysler sixes now in owners' hands. The engine has a bore of 3 1-8 inches and stroke of 4 1-4 inches with a displacement of 195.6 cubic inches. The compression ratio is 5.2 to 1.

The seat of the convertible coupe is adjustable, and provides ample room for two or three passengers. Convenience and completeness are provided for the driver. Grouped in a panel indirectly illuminated are speedometer, ammeter, oil pressure gauge and electric fuel gauge. Carburetor choke and theft lock ignition switch are within easy reach. On top of the three-spoke steering wheel are the light control switch, gasoline throttle and horn button. Spark control is entirely automatic. Gear shift is standard, three speeds forward and one reverse. The hand brake contracts on the drive shaft, while service brakes are the Chrysler weatherproof internal-expanding four-wheel hydraulic type, affording safety at all driving speeds.

Other features offered as standard equipment include four hydraulic shock absorbers, fuel pump, rubber insulated frame and engine and the bonderite rust-proofing process on all enameled parts.

Ancient Hupps Arrive for S. A. E. Convention Display

FRENCH LICK, Ind., May 31.—Two venerable Hupmobiles which were displayed at the annual spring meeting of the Society of Automotive Engineers are creating an unusual amount of interest among the guests and citizens of this resort.

One of these cars is a 1909 Hupmobile roadster—the first car to be used by the Detroit police department. The other is a 1910 phaeton which was the first automobile to make a trip around the world. The two cars are in charge of Thomas J. Hanlon of the factory service department. Hanlon was one of the two drivers on the 'round the world trip.

The roadster bears serial number 176. It was used to patrol Detroit's parks and boulevards and to transport police officials about the city. Like other cars of its time, it is cranked by hand and has oil side lights and gas head lamps. Its record included 217 arrests of "reckless speeders in four and one-half months," more than 10,000 miles in Detroit's police service, during which it averaged better than 20 miles to the gallon. This car was sold by the city of Detroit to the Marine City, Mich., police department and disappeared for a number of years, turning up in the hands of college students in the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor. It was discovered there by a traveling representative of the Hupp Motor Car Corp. three years ago and purchased by the company. It is the oldest Hupmobile known to the manufacturer, and is still capable of turning up 40 miles an hour.

The other car in Hupmobile's display has the unique distinction of being operated with a jinrikisha axle instead of the conventional rear axle. The part was made by hand in Japan, when the original axle was broken during the famous round the world trip in 1910.

INTEREST OF AUTOMOBILE WORLD SHIFTS TO INDIANAPOLIS

500-Mile Race Demands Attention of Engineers

Speed Struggle May Advance Practical Side of Passenger Car Operation.

BY E. Y. WATSON.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., May 28.—(NANA)—This section of Indiana became the temporary center of interest for the automotive world this week with the running of the 18th annual five hundred mile race here and the 25th anniversary assembly of the Society of Automotive Engineers at French Lick Springs, Ind.

The events interlocked, because the engineering fraternity, 1,200 strong, quit French Lick on Thursday and trooped over to the speedway. They came to see high speed, wind resistance, car acceleration and other things they had been discussing, demonstrated in a track battle of engines and pilots.

With them came 30 French engineers who are investigating automobilism in the United States. In addition there were two Italian Maserati cars in the contest, so the interest became international in scope.

Change In Rules.

The visitors saw a speed struggle in which four, six, eight and 16 cylinder cars were pitted against each other for the first time under the new rules by which it is hoped the practical side of passenger car operation may make further scientific advances.

Among the nearly two score racers that sped over the Indianapolis bricks, the engineers saw streamlined bodies of every conceivable kind that had been built to give as little resistance as possible to wind pressure.

As Professor Felix W. Pawlowski, of the University of Michigan, had told the engineering assembly before the scientists came to the track, the demand for more speedy motor cars has come with the development of good roads.

"This demand," he ponted out, "is being satisfied gradually by the installation of more powerful engines in cars. We have passed already the 100-horsepower mark, and, although gasoline is still rather cheap in comparison with European conditions, nevertheless the question of reducing the engine power through reduction of resistance to the otion of the vehicle, attracts more and more attention."

Wind Resistance.

Professor Pawlowski pointed out that wind resistance begins to exceed road resistance at 40 miles an hour. Then he went on to describe wind tunnel tests whereby the speed of both motor cars and airplanes may be predetermined from toy models of actual vehicles. At a speed of 50 miles an hour, the wind resistance of the usual motor car is between 110 and 170 pounds, absorbing between 15 and 23 horsepower from the engine. At a speer of 100 miles an hour these figures would be quadrupled.

Electrically operated brakes, said to be a possibility of the future for cars, were explained by John White, chief engineer of a company in Beloit, Wis. This mechanism consists of an of an electromagnetic energizing unit combined with a brakeshoe, acting as an amplifying unit. In action, the maguet, when energized by current, grips an armature and trier to rotate with it. The rotation continues until the brake band expands against the drum surface and checks the motion of the wheels.

On riding comfort, Professor F. A. Moss, of George Washington University, described research tests with the "Wabblemeter," a device that tests the equilibrium of a man and determines how much fatigued he may be after hours of driving.

Vibration Tests.

Two groups of subjects, one composed of thirty-nine taxicab drivers and another of thirty-six university students, underwent the tests. They revealed a definite relationship between the vibrations in the cars and the amount of fatigue experienced. The taxi drivers showed the effects of it more than the university men.

The car vibrations or unsteadiness of the vehicles were measured by using another device called the accelerometer. From this it was learned that equivalent trips of a 1925 model car and one of modern build, showed a score for the five-year-old car of 39,080 as compared with 2,250 for the new one. The results indicate, Professor Moss believes, that curerent models are much easier to ride in than the older ones.

Diesel engines occupied a large portion of the engineers' deliberations. Interest was stimulated by the apearance at the convention of a Diesel electric bus, representing a new automotive development. The bus traveled on its own power from Newark, N. J., to French Lick, a route of 900 miles, involving passage through the mountains of Pennsylvania. It has been in operation in New Jersey since last fall and is said to be the only vehicle of its kind in the world.

Cheap Fuel Used.

The power plant consumed cheap fuel oil instead of gasoline and is an importation from Germany where it was built for truck use by the Mercedes-Benz factory. It has six cylinders with bore and stroke 3 5-16x5 29-32 inches and a rating of seventy-five horsepower at 1,600 revolutions. Fitted with fuel pump and injection nozzles, it is started with an electric motor which heats "glow plugs" in precombustion chambers for thiry seconds.

Low cost of operation is the chief advantage claimed for this vehicle in addition to the elimination of the regular ignition system and the carbureter. Besides, the builders claim to have got rid of excess smoke from the exhaust. It is odorless and free from poisonous carbon monoxide gas.

Talking on transmissions, Herbert Chase, New York engineer, made comparisons between four-speed and three-speed gear sets as now used in American cars. Among the advantages of the four-speed types he listed ease of shifting and quiet operation, but he raised a question as to whether all the superiority claimed could be realized in pracetice.

Drawing no final conclusion, Mr. Chase left the impression that most, if not all of the alleged four-speed advantages, can be obtained with the simpler, less expensive three-speed type that requires less shifting.

Marmon Guarantee Reveals Confidence Of Manufacturer

The confidence which an automobile company may have in its products as a result of constant improvement through modern manufacturing and engineering facilities is revealed in the new one-year warranty against defective parts and workmanship now placed on all Marmon straight-eights.

This is the statement of Thomas E. Jarrard, Marmon general sales director, who pointed out that the guarantee which was announced only a short time ago already has been given unprecedented acceptance by dealers and public alike.

"The performance and durability of thousands of Marmon straight-eights in the hands of owners plus a combination of precision methods and quantity production has made it possible for Marmon to know the dependability of its cars," Mr. Jarrard said. "Though we realize our new guarantee is a departure of far-reaching importance, we took this means of extending to prospective purchasers the benefit of our four years of experience in the straight-eight field.

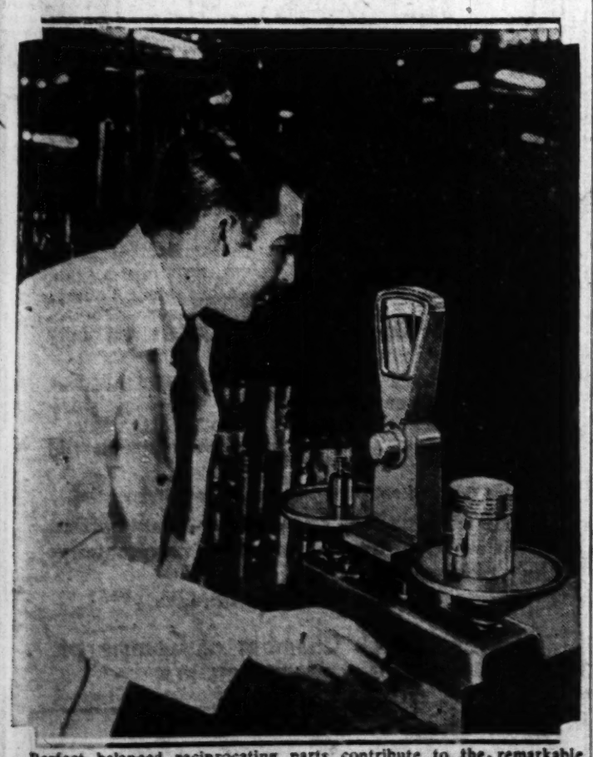

"We find manufacturers of radio sets and many other articles of merchandise—even golf clubs—giving their owners a guarantee of considerable duration. Surely, the automobile is developed to even a greater degree than many of these newer products which have come on the market comparatively recently. Why, then, should not the motor car be sold under a similar warranty?

"Many instances of the durability of Marmon cars in the hands of owners have been received and it is because of these, in addition to several outstanding tests made by the factory, that the guarantee was decided upon. Last year, it will be remembered, a Marmon-built Roosevelt car traveled 440 hours or more than 18 days without a stop on the Indianapolis speedway under the supervision of the A. A. A., and shortly afterward a similar car visited every state capital within a month, piling up a mileage of more than 18,000 miles.

"The cars that made these records were everyday stock models such as were sold by every Marmon distributor and dealer. This year's models, of course, are improved and refined to an even further degree, and it is on the 1930 cars that the guarantee is placed."

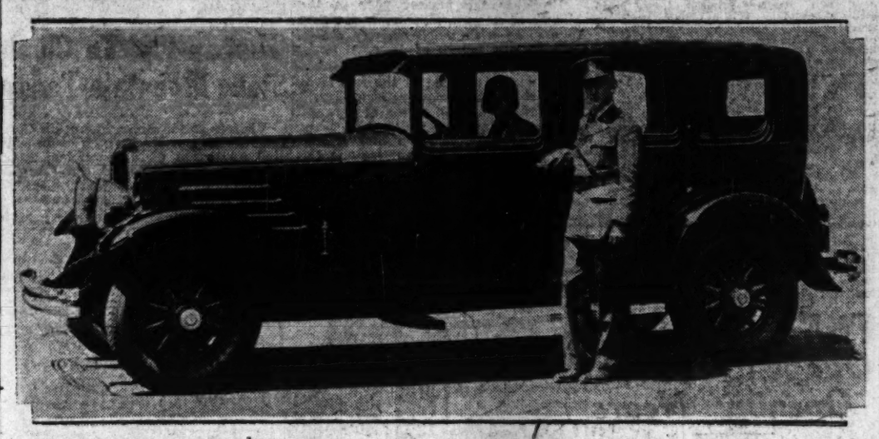

The new Marmon factory warranty covers a period of one year from date of purchase or not to exceed 12,000 miles of driving, whichever shall first occur. It covers to the original purchaser all material and workmanship and, it is pointed out by Mr. Jarrard, applies to the Marmon-Roosevelt in the $1,000 field as well as to the Marmon Big Eight in the fine car class and to the two straight-eights in the intermediate price ranges. The guarantee also is extended to all purchasers of Marmon cars since May 1 of this year.

Perfect Balance

Perfect balanced reciprocating parts contribute to the remarkable smoothness of Studebaker motor cars. Prior to assembly, connecting rods are matched in sets. Every piston is weighed to the fraction of an ounce (above). These are only two of the many vital inspections which feature Studebaker's precision manufacture.

Army Chaplain First To Get Transcontinent Franklin

Captain and Mrs. Charles C. Merrill, first retail purchasers of the new air-cooled Franklin transcontinent sedan. They are shown leaving the Franklin factory at Syracuse, N. Y., for Cristobal, Canal Zone, where the captain is an army chaplain. The new sedan gets its name from the notable road records established by the air-cooled Franklin. It is powered by the new airplane-type engine which already has successfully flown an airplane.

Trans-Continent Sedan Announced by Franklin

A new sedan with the tradition of serviceability and powerful, speedy performance behind its designation as the transcontinental model, is currently being introduced at all Franklin dealerships as an addition to the 1930 Franklin line, to meet the demand that has grown up since the first of the year for a quality car which by an advantage in price would bring air-cooling and the performance typified by Franklin's national records, within the reach of a wider range of users.

This new model is powered by the standard air-cooled airplane-type engine which already has gained a notable reputation for Franklin as the fastest road car in America. It is priced at $2,395 f. o. b. factory, which permits its delivery locally at approximately $200 less than other Franklin sedan types and less than prevailing sedan prices in the fine car field generally.

"This new transcontinent sedan, as its name implies, was developed to have special appeal to the thousands of persons who drive their cars hard, who see in the air-cooled car their ultimate car, and who are always seeking uninterrupted miles of fast, trouble-free, comfortable motoring," Frank Bell, sales manager for the local Franklin dealer, states.

In appearance the new model carries out in detail the distinctive motif characteristic of the 1930 Franklin. Its style, together with the conformance of its chassis to all series 145 details, fosters the pride of ownership and the increased motoring enjoyment and longer life which is always attached to fine car use.

Especially this year, Franklin officials state, value has been a point which has actuated considerable buying of fine cars, which owners have more and more regarded in the light of wise investments. It is the aim of the Franklin transcontinent sedan to permit fine car ownership at no greater cost than that of a car of lesser quality.

Its airplane-type air-cooled engine develops 95 horsepower and, together with the comfort qualities of Franklin, produces speeds of 60, 70, 80 miles an hour, and even farther above the ordinary driving range, with notable lack of the usual sensations experienced with this kind of fast travel. The impression is more like the expected smoothness of 30, 40 and 50 miles an hour, a demonstration reveals. The chassis is regularly equipped with a silent-type transmission with three speeds including an internal gear intermediate shift.

The new transcontinent sedan is a five passenger car with wide seats, roomy interior and service giving trim and fitments and is offered in three color selections.

Change Your Oil Filter Cartridge Every 10,000 Miles

After this mileage the filtering unit ceases to function as it has become filled with dirt, sludge and abrasive material taken from the oil. Replacing the cartridge every 10,000 miles means saving in wear, less frequent repair bills and real oil economy as the motor oil can be used for 2000 miles or more.

Fish of Georgia Quake as Season Opening Nears

Jeremiah Q. Fisch, alias Perch, Bass, Trout, etc., etc., Saturday afternoon took a deep breath and burrowed in the mud of the rippling, rushing Chattahoochee. Mr. Fisch had a very good reason for his action.

"Great scott!" Mr. Fisch exclaimed Saturday, as he took his dive, "two days more will see that army of Waltonites coming out this way, and I had better get out of sight right now. That old Pete Twitty up at the state capitol announces that I am legitimate prey in 40 counties of north Georgia effective Monday, and there's no way for an honest fish to turn but what some fisherman will be cropping up with an alluring fly or a dainty worm. What luck! What luck!

"It used to be that fishermen depended upon plain, ordinary worms on a hook . . . and a real canny fish could avoid disaster. Now, it is different. The anglers come out here with all sorts of funny doo dads that look like legitimate food. One takes a rush at them and strikes, and where is one? I ask you. The answer is: One is just a poor fish . . . outa luck.

"The law is removing its protection from us poor fish, and, as for myself, I am joining the communists in the morning. I've always been a little radical, and now I'm just an out-and-out bolshevik. Hurrah for Lenin and down with the anglers! Join our Worker's League and help out the poor, downtrodden, oppressed fish. The line forms on the right."

Look 'Em Over

BEWARE of the used automobiles frequently offered as "demonstrators" or "slightly used" unless you know the party well with whom you are dealing. It is always much safer to buy your automobile from a reputable dealer. We sell lots of cars and our reputation stands behind them. We invite you to compare our values—look 'em over before you buy! Remember, our prices are as low as the lowest and our "better than a guarantee" fully protects you.

THE CONSTITUTION'S REAL ESTATE REVIEW

CONDUCTED IN THE INTEREST OF DEVELOPMENT OF ATLANTA AND THE SOUTH

Southern City To Be Mecca For Nation's Property Men

Journeys to Biloxi for National Building Owners, Managers' Convention Start This Week.

Skyscraper men of America will begin their journey next week to Biloxi, Miss., by land, by sea and by air, to attend the twenty-third annual convention of the National Association of Building Owners and Managers, which opens Monday, June 9.

In going by land, special trains, special cars and regular cars as well as automobiles will take hundreds of delegates to the southern convention city. In going by sea the New York delegation, augmented by delegations from the New England cities and from other northern Atlantic cities, will take passage Wednesday afternoon, June 4, on the S. S. Shawnee, which will land the party at Mobile early Monday morning, June 9, a few hours before the convention is opened.

To Cross Continent.

Most of the aeronauts will come from the Pacific northwest. A group of Seattle building owners and managers have chartered a plane, which is scheduled for a two-day hop to Biloxi, with the first night spent in Los Angeles and the second in Biloxi.

In going to Biloxi, the skyscraper men will be holding their annual convention below the Mason and Dixon line for the first time in 15 years.

The decision to go south this year, it was explained by Paul Robertson, of Indianapolis, president of the National Association of Building Owners and Managers, was made in recognition of the great development that has taken place in the business districts of southern cities.

Praises South.

"The south has kept pace with other sections of the country in the development of the commercial districts of its cities," said Mr. Robertson. "The skylines of southern cities, rising to new heights, give eloquent evidence of the progress that has been made since 1915, when the National Association of Building Owners and Managers met in Atlanta, Ga. It is in recognition of this progress and the men who made it possible that we decided to hold our convention in the south."

The convention will devote itself to a concentrated study of operating and rental problems of the nation's great buildings. Exhibits of new operating devices and rental campaigns have been arranged for in conjunction with the convention.

Dr. Brittain Is Speaker.

The program includes addresses by several distinguished speakers among them Sidney W. Souers, executive vice president of the Canal Bank & Trust Company, of New Orleans, one of the foremost financial authorities in the south, who will speak on "The Business Outlook," and Dr. Marion Luther Brittain, president of the Georgia Institute of Technology, of Atlanta, nationally famed educator who will speak on "The Young Man in Business."

Dr. M. L. Brittain To Be Featured At Biloxi Meet

Atlanta is scheduled to play a prominent part in success of the annual convention of the National Association of Building Owners and Managers, opening at Biloxi on June 9, according to advance information published by the local chapter.

Prominent among the Atlantans on the business program is Dr. M. L. Brittain, president Georgia School of Technology. Dr. Brittain will address the convention on "The Young Business Man."

Allan C. Gottschaldt, president of the well-known advertising firm of Gottschaldt-Humphrey, Inc., with offices in the Palmer building, will deliver a paper on "Office Building Advertising."

L. A. McKinley, of the Burdett Realty Company in the Candler building, is on the program of the apartment house division for a paper on "Factors Causing Distressed Apartment Houses."

K. S. McAllister, of management W. T. Candler properties, chairman of specialized building committee will also take part in program.

Mrs. Charles F. Palmer is general chairman of the ladies' entertainment committee.

Charles F. Wilkinson and C. H. Candler, Jr., are members from Atlanta on the general entertainment committee. Mr. Wilkinson will also make a report on medical buildings.

In addition to the above, Charles F. Palmer, as first vice president of national association, will take prominent part in a general way for the success of the convention as a whole. He will be one of the leading figures in success of the owners' luncheon meeting.

Atlanta's delegation to the Biloxi convention will be by far the largest that ever attended a convention of the national association.

The list to date to attend the convention from Atlanta are: Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Palmer, Mr. and Mrs. John Knox, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Beck, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Shaefer, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Wilkinson, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh C. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. H. I. Fincherf, R. R. Otis, W. R. Otis, L. A. McKinley, W. H. Thones, W. T. Weekley, J. F. Clegg, F. L. Smith, W. H. Sheib, J. Horacek, C. L. Trussell, Frank McMaster, W. L. Quinlen, W. H. Broadnax, K. S. McAllister, John W. Grant, Jr. Those considering the trip, and will decide within the next few days are: Mr. and Mrs. S. S. Gibbs, Paul Reid, "Bill Jones," Walter T. Candler and Mr. and Mrs. Paul W. Miller.

The Atlanta team for the golf tournament will be composed of John W. Grant, Jr., captain; Charles F. Palmer, J. Horacek, John Knox and W. H. Shieb.

Larger Offices House Keenan And Chambers

Another step in the growth of the Keenan & Chambers Real Estate Agency was seen in recent announcement of removal of offices from 1113 Healey building to 1008-1009 Healey building. The new quarters constitute an enlargement of the brokerage concern to provide additional space for its expanding facilities.

Combining the personages of Walter Keenan and J. J. Chambers, two of Atlanta's most widely known real estate brokers, the agency has held a leading position in the market.

Mr. Chambers and Mr. Keenan have been important factors in the progress of Atlanta property transactions, having negotiated many of the largest deals announced. In addition to local transactions their activity has extended over wide outside territory.

Mr. Keenan and Mr. Chambers have been identified together in the real estate profession for a long period of years. The enlarged quarters on the tenth floor of the Healey building are now being occupied by them.

New Piedmont Hotel Shop Leased by Otis

The Greeter Information Bureau, which is operated by Hazel McDade and Louella Jones, has leased the shop at 91 Forsyth street, N. W., ground floor of the Piedmont hotel.

The lease was handled by the R. R. Otis Company, agents of the Peachtree Arcade building who also handle the business space in the Piedmont hotel. This agency has leased all the shops but one on the Forsyth street side of the hotel.

WHITEHURST GROUNDS TO BE SOLD JUNE 4

King Auction Company To Handle Peachtree Property.

Selling of the Whitehurst grounds in the valuable Peachtree road section, between Piedmont and Roxboro roads, formerly the residential estate of the prominent W. H. White family, to be conducted by public auction beginning at 1:30 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, June 4, has attracted wide interest since its announcement.

Disposal of the beautiful northside tract to the highest bidders will be handled by the King Auction Company, with J. P. King, famed auctioneer, manipulating the hammer.

Included in the important selling event will be a large number of home sites, into which the Whitehurst property has been subdivided, also a seven-room brick bungalow, located on the grounds and facing Fulton avenue.

The property is readily accessible, having approximately 1,000 feet fronting on Fulton avenue and an equivalent frontage on Central avenue, where these two roads lead into the exclusive residential vicinity of Peachtree road. The area is familiar to Atlantans because of the beauty of the section nad its association as the highly prized estate of the well-known White family. Whitehurst grounds have occupied an envied position among the leading local residential areas.

According to Mr. King, whose long connection with the realty auction field, embracing some of the most outstanding successes of the past, has labeled him as an expert, the Whitehurst grounds offer brings into the market the type of property that is being most sought after.

REPORTS MAY SALES TOTALING $75,000

May real estate sales, amounting to approximately $75,000, were announced Saturday by Oliver Dolvin, president of the Dolvin Realty Company, agents in the transactions.

The deals involved homes and vacant lots, located principally in the northeast section. Immediate improvement of many of the lots sold was indicated in the transactions, promising considerable activity in this field, it was pointed out by Mr. Dolvin.

The list reported by the Dolvin agency follows:

Pickwick Owners' Bid High

Sold under the facile hammer of the Johnson Realty Auction Company, this downtown parcel brought $80,000 cash last week. It is situated on the southeast corner of Carnegie way and Fairlie street, with frontages of 60.5 and 56.5 feet, respectively, and adjoins the Pickwick hotel, also owned by the purchasers. It is known as the Lorraine apartments, pioneer bachelor abode of Atlanta. Ben Johnson, head of the auction concern handling the sale, pointed out that the transaction involved one of the most important properties auctioned in Atlanta in some time. The gross monthly rental from the 27 apartments of the building was said to be $900.

Construction Development Planned for Lorraine Site

Owners of Pickwick Hotel Buy Carnegie Way Corner—Consider Annex to Hotel.

Prospects of an important construction development to occupy the present site of the Lorraine apartments sometime in the future were seen as a possible consequence of purchase last week of the corner property at Carnegie Way and Fairlie street by the Mutual Realty Company.

Plan Pickwick Annex.

While the apartment house property was bought at auction through Attorney Gordon Mitchell for the Mutual Realty Company, 96 per cent of the Lorraine apartment stock had previously been acquired by principals of the Mutual Realty Company. They are A. F. Walker, formerly of Walker & Chase, architects and engineers; Mrs. Walker and Mrs. J. B. F. Herreschoff, of Atlanta, and Ridley M. Enslow, of South Orange, N. J.

The property adjoins the Pickwick hotel on Fairlie street, which also is owned by the Mutual Realty Company. According to plans being considered by the owners, a modern hotel would be erected at some future date, supplanting the Lorraine apartment building and serving as an enlargement of the Pickwick hotel.

$100,000 Par Value.

The bid of $80,000, which was accepted by the Johnson Realty Auction Company as high offer, is not regarded as representing the full cost to the Mutual Realty Company of the important parcel of real estate, inasmuch as the company had been acquiring the bulk of the Lorraine apartment stock at par over a period of years. The par capitalization is $100,000.

The Lorraine was erected in 1903 by R. B. Riley and was one of the first bachelor apartments in this city and it has been the home of many Atlanta businessmen since its erection. Mr. Riley sold the property in 1913 to J. H. Ewing and C. F. Benson, who later sold to Asa G. Candler, Sr. Mr. Candler later traded the property to the Realty Trust Company for the Forsyth building, corner of Forsyth and Luckie streets.

The Realty Trust Company, wishing to liquidate the company, incorporated the Lorraine Apartment Company with a capital of $100,000 in 1915 and then gave their shareholders the privilege of exchanging their Realty Trust Company's stock for Lorraine stock or some of their other property holdings.

CARL FORT PROMOTED TO VICE PRESIDENCY

CARL FORT

Carl Fort, active figure in major residential transactions of the local market, was appointed vice president of the Draper-Owens Company, it was announced Saturday by Jesse Draper, president. With his promotion to membership in the firm, Mr. Fort will continue in charge of residential sales for the large brokerage concern.

Mr. Fort entered the real estate business upon the formation of Draper-Owens Company, February 1, 1924, and has specialized during this time in northside residences. Besides leading the sales organization of Draper-Owens Company in volume of business each year, Mr. Fort is credited with the distinction of having produced the largest volume of residential sales of any realtor in Atlanta since he entered the real estate business, among which were the three highest priced residences ever sold in Atlanta, Mr. Draper said.

This completes the departmentizing of the present organization of Draper-Owens Company, Jerry Blount, secretary, being manager of the lease department, which department has increased in gross business over $2,000,000 pear year for the last three years; and George Brown, assistant secretary, having recently been appointed manager of the insurance department, Mr. Draper announced.

Robbers Use Jazz As Hold-Up Screen

NEW YORK, May 31.—(AP)—While a four-piece orchestra played its loudest jazz under the persuasion of a leveled revolver, two men early today held up a Chinese restaurant in the Bronx.

After obtaining $142 from the cash register and $88 and a quantity of jewelry from guests, waiters and cooks, the holdup men made a hurried departure when Yim Won, a waiter, taking fright at a shot fired by one of the robbers, leaped through the window to the street, one floor below. He fractured both legs.

A short time after the robbery detectives arrested Salvatore Forcina, 26 years old, the number of whose automobile was furnished by a passerby as the one used by the holdup men. In his pockets the police found $142. He denied any knowledge of the robbery.

Norfolk Commandant Relinquishes His Post

NORFOLK, Va., May 31.—(AP)—Rear Admiral W. T. Cluverius, for the past two years commandant of the Norfolk navy yard today hauled down his flag to surrender the local command to Read Admiral Frank H. Brumby.

Admiral Cluverius left tonight by steamer for Washington. On Tuesday at Annapolis he will take over the command of battleship division 3 of the scouting fleet from Rear Admiral Harris Laning, who goes to the post of president of the Naval War college at Newport. On Friday, aboard his flagship, the Arkansas, and accompanied by the Utah and Florida, Admiral Cluverius will sail for Europe in command of the regular midshipmen's cruise.

New Homes Show Wide Variety of Design

G.S.C.W. Students Will Hear Woman Graduation Orator

Miss Lucy Gage, of Peabody School, To Speak at Exercises Monday in Milledgeville.

MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga., May 31. For the thirty-ninth time, Georgia girls, hundreds of them, will receive the reward of their student days at the Georgia State College for Women next Monday, when they are given their diplomas and degrees from this popular institution. President Jasper L. Beeson will preside over the exercises. The candidates for degrees and diplomas will be presented to the head of the college by the heads of the various departments, who will certify to their having satisfactorily passed the required work during the two or four years they have been here.

The graduates will for the first time hear a woman commencement orator, Miss Lucy Gage, of Peabody, a noted woman educator, recently accepted the invitation of the college to deliver the literary address.

A capacity audience will assemble in the Richard B. Russell auditorium Sunday morning to hear the beloved Georgia divine, Bishop Warren A. Candler, preach the commencement sermon. Particular sentiment attaches to Bishop Candler as a friend of G. S. C. W. He was the former instructor of the second president of the institution, Dr. Marvin M. Parks, when the latter was a student at Emory. When the Richard B. Russell auditorium was completed in 1927, Dr. Parks, who had personally directed the building, invited Bishop Candler to dedicate the auditorium at Thanksgiving, preaching the first sermon ever preached in it. Less than a month later, Bishop Candler returned to preach another sermon in the building, the funeral sermon of President Parks, who had been killed in an automobile accident at Tampa.

Tribute to Dr. Parks.

The memory of President Parks has been honored this commencement. A tribute to his memory was part of the class day exercises at the Friday program of the senior degree class. A memorial song was sung for him. The other two presidents of the institution have also been honored. The commencement program included the presentation of a portrait of the first president, Dr. J. Harris Chappell, to the college by the Alumnae Association. It will hang in the auditorium just opposite the picture of Dr. Parks. The first portrait of Dr. Chappell was burned in the fire that destroyed the main building and auditorium in December, 1925. The present president, Dr. Jasper Luther Beeson, who has made for himself a place of affection and high esteem in the hearts of his students, was paid glowing tribute Friday by Miss Annie Kate Melton, of Decatur, in an enthusiastic speech which was part of the class day program.

Judge Russell Welcome Visitor.

A welcome visitor to every commencement is Judge Richard B. Russell, chairman of the board of trustees, whose name goes on every diploma and degree awarded by the college. An evidence of the attitude of the students and officials toward the chief justice has been twice displayed in recent times. The board of trustees named the new auditorium the Richard B. Russell auditorium in his honor. And the 1930 Spectrum, annual of the college, has been dedicated to Judge Richard B. Russell. Miss Iverson Dews, of Decatur, is editor-in-chief, and Miss Mary Elliott, of Norcross is business manager. The annuals arrived last Saturday, just in time to allow the girls to get the prized "autographs," and "best wishes" of faculty and fellow students written in them.

The exhibits, an annual feature of the commencement will be held Monday afternoon in all the departments, and the long stream of visitors will be conducted through by class officers and students.

The alumnae banquet was held Saturday evening at the college tea room, Miss Katherine K. Scott, alumnae president, presiding. Mrs. Arch McKinley, president of the Baldwin County G. S. C. W. Club, was in charge of reservations.

Those Who Will Be Graduated.

The following named young women will be graduated from G. C. C. W. on Monday:

Bachelor of Arts—Austelle Adams, Royston; Martha Anne Archer, Cartersville; Adeline Cornell Atwood, Darien; Willie G. MACON LAWYER FINED FOR COURT CONTEMPT

MACON, Ga., May 31.—(AP)—Jesse Harris, campaign manager in the recent bond election here, was adjudged in contempt of court by Judge H. A. Mathews here today and fined $100 for a remark made by Harris during examination by the Bibb county grand jury May 9.

Hearing of the citation continued for nearly three hours, during which Mr. Harris, represented by three attorneys, contended that the remark in which was included the phrase, "dirty rat," was directed to a single member of the jury "known to be my political enemy."

No name was mentioned.

The remark: "By the way, I was just informed by a witness who came out of the grand jury room that a certain man in the room asked him whether I had said anything to him about what his testimony would be before this grand jury, and I want to say here, in the presence of the grand jury and the solicitor general that the man who asked the question, and made that intimation, is a dirty rat."

Mr. Harris had been called before the grand jury as a witness during the body's probe of alleged irregularities in the $1,000,000 municipal bond election of March 18.

The campaign manager openly apologized to the court, and said, "Personally, I have the highest and greatest respect for this court. It incensed me to think that that man, of all the grand jurors, had asked a witness such a question. I want to apologize in open court, and to assure the court that I have the highest respect for the court and for the administration of justice in the county."

Passing sentence, Judge Mathews said: "I do not think this statement of facts justifies Mr. Harris in his conduct. It is a question of public law, and not private grievance. A grand juror had a right to ask any question he sees fit and the witness, under the circumstances, could have refused to answer."

The grand jury will resume its investigation of alleged irregularities in the bond election on next Tuesday. The body has been in recess for more than two weeks.

Mr. Harris is given 20 days, under the law, to decide whether or not he will appeal from the decision of Judge Mathews.

WM. J. LAVARRE TIRES OF LIFE BEHIND BARS

MACON, Ga., May 31.—(AP)—An application for bail for William LaVarre, former associate of Harold Hall in the operation of four southeastern newspapers, was filed in United States district court here Saturday through counsel. LaVarre is in jail at Augusta pending hearing set for June 16 on a citation for criminal contempt of court issued by Judge Bascom S. Deaver as an outgrowth of LaVarre's litigation with Hall over the newspapers.

LaVarre's attorney, W. O. Cooper, Jr., of Macon, brought the application in the form of a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, but made it clear to Judge Deaver that bail is all he desires.

The application for bail is assigned for a hearing before Judge Deaver in Athens on Tuesday morning. Judge Deaver will be in Athens throughout the week, engaged in the regular session of United States district court there.

In the petition Mr. Cooper alleges that LaVarre "is imprisoned, detained and being restrained of his liberty illegally, unlawfully and unjustly by being held and confined in jail," and maintains his innocence of the charge.

It is set out in the application that LaVarre, of his own free will and accord, dismissed appeals in New York and voluntarily surrendered to officers in the southern district of Georgia, "believing that he would, upon his surrender, be granted a hearing on the citation for criminal contempt." Upon arriving here, however, he learned that the citation hearing could not be held before June 16, which necessitates his going to jail in Augusta. No bond has been fixed in the meantime, it was said. He said that the bond in New York, returnable on the date of his surrender, was to be in full force and effect "until the citation could be finally heard and adjudged by said court."

LaVarre alleges that his "restraint and confinement is illegal and contrary to the law in that he is being deprived of his liberty contrary to the laws and constitution of the United States by reason that he is being held in said jail on said commitment without bail and that the offense as charged is bailable under the laws, and that the right and privilege of giving bail has thus far been denied him."

LaVarre added in the petition that he had no intention to evade the hearing, and no intention of absenting himself from the jurisdiction of the court.

Counsel for the defense immediately announced that the case would be appealed to the United States circuit court of appeals. Brown was charged with being engaged in liquor deals in which the "Big Four," tried seven years ago and convicted, were involved. A hard fought legal contest lasted all this week. A former trial, held last November, resulted in a mistrial. Norman H. Morrison and John F. Coldiron, special assistants to the attorney general, assisted District Attorney Charles L. Redding, for the government. Bouhan and Atkinson, Savannah; Mel Price, of Ludowici, Ga., and A. M. Deal, of Statesboro, Ga., were defense counsel. Arguments were completed and jury charged at 2 o'clock Saturday. The jury was out two hours.

OXFORD DISTRICT MEET AT HADDOCK ADJOURNS

HADDOCK, Ga., May 31.—Concluding its work with the second-day session, the Oxford district conference has adjourned.

Representatives of colleges and of connectional interests were heard in behalf of their respective enterprises. Local preachers, of whom there are 12 in the Oxford district, submitted reports of their year's activities, which having been reviewed by a committee, their characters were passed and, where unordained, their licenses renewed.

Reports of pastors, which had been tabulated, were made the subject of study and formed the basis of reports from the following committees: The spiritual state of the church, missions, Golden Cross, education, Sunday schools, Epworth leagues, Woman's Missionary societies, social service and temperance, lay activities, Christian literature, industrial work, family religion, and others.

The conference was very enthusiastic in voicing its appreciation in suitable resolutions for the splendid entertainment furnished by the people of Haddock, and for the very fine music furnished during the conference by the Haddock choir.

Meets Next Year in Eatonton.

The conference next year will meet with the Imperial Mills congregation at Eatonton, Ga.

The following delegates and alternates were elected to attend the North Georgia conference, which meets in Atlanta, November 12 next: Sydney Stembridge, Milledgeville; J. B. Duke, Eatonton; E. B. Nelson, Newborn; Mrs. J. O. Brand, Monticello; H. F. Branham, Covington; C. D. Ramsey, Covington, S. P. Myrick, Haddock; J. T. Williams, Round Oak; Dr. W. T. Winn, Milledgeville; L. L. Allison, Eatonton; Mrs. J. A. Middlebrooks, Haddock.

Alternates: E. C. Kelly, Monticello; W. F. Mayo, Social Circle; N. A. Morse, Mansfield, and F. A. Ragsdale, Redan.

Opening Sermon by Dr. Crawley.

The opening sermon was delivered by Rev. Walter G. Crawley, who immediately preceded Dr. Dempsey as presiding elder of this district. His message was fervently evangelistic and the great congregation was swept and stirred by emotion under the earnest appeal of the visiting minister.

The following connectional visitors were heard with much interest as they represented their respective causes: C. E. Lovett, conference, director of the Golden Cross, and Dr. R. A. Edmondson, conference agent for superannuate homes; Professor W. A. Carlton, of Emory Junior College spoke in the interest of the Greater Emory system.

Among the matters stressed were the following: Mrs. J. O. Brand, district secretary of the Woman's Missionary Society, urged a large attendance upon the approaching district meeting to be held in Monticello, June 11 and 12; presiding elder exhorted pastors and laymen to make the approaching third quarterly conference a great success, also that the pastors of the Oxford district attend the pastors' school to be held in the Wesleyan College, Macon, in the near future; and that the laymen see that much is made of Layman's Day, which is June 8 and which will have church-wide observance in connection with the lay activities of southern Methodism.

Praise for Dr. Dempsey.

A high point of the day's proceedings was reached when Rev. J. R. Jordon introduced a resolution of appreciation for the service and fellowship of Dr. E. F. Dempsey, presiding elder. Dr. Dempsey has served four years in the Oxford district, and according to the law of the church this year marks the close of this work in the district. The resolution was unanimously adopted by rising vote, and Dr. Dempsey was deeply moved by these expressions so beautifully expressed in his behalf.

TOOMBS CO. FARMERS HIGHLY COMPLIMENTED

LYONS, Ga., May 31.—Toombs county farmers who entered the profitable farming contest being carried on by the Georgia State College of Agriculture in co-operation with the Georgia Power Company have been highly complimented on their progress by Kenneth Treanor, extension economist of the college, who is in direct charge of the work.

Mr. Treanor, who was accompanied by A. T. Roberts, of the Georgia Power Company, spent a day in Lyons going over the books of farmers for the purpose of bringing them up to date and straightening out any tangles that may have originated since the contest was set up here in February. It was the neat and effective work Toombs county farmers have been doing that brought the compliment from Mr. Treanor.

The profitable farming contest was set up by the farm management division of the state college to promote more efficient production practices and to reduce production costs in agriculture. It embraces six fundamental factors which the college contends are most needed in farming—interest on investment, labor distribution, income distribution, larger yields, diversity and reserve. The winners will be determined upon the basis of these factors as shown by the books of the contestant. The contest is limited to five counties in each of the four extension divisions of the state, and Toombs county is one of the five in southeast Georgia. The prize in each division is $200, with an additional $200 for the high man of the state. The prizes are furnished by the Georgia Power Company, which is also supporting the work by a series of advertisements in the newspapers of the state.

The Kiwanis Club of Lyons has the success of this work as one of its objectives. Mr. Roberts, of the power company, addressed the club shortly after the inception of the contest, explaining how it was an ABC approach to the fundamental requirement of agriculture, net profits.

PEACH SHIPMENTS LIGHT THIS WEEK

Most of Fruit Will Come From Points South of Macon.

MACON, Ga., May 31.—(AP)—The movement of peaches during the coming week will be light, according to the Georgia Peach Growers' Exchange, whose agents have made a survey of the situation. Most of the fruit will come from points south of Macon.

This will consist of Uneedas with a few crates of Early Rose mixed in. The real movement of Early Rose will begin the week of June 8, with Carmans moving the following week.

It is expected that the first car of Hileys will be shipped June 19 to 20 and the variety should furnish the first big movement to the northern markets.

First Georgia Belles should move June 28 to June 30 and the first carload shipments of Elbertas are due July 3 to 5.

Cool weather of the last two or three days has been holding back the development of the fruit. Dates given are based on normal weather.

Conditions were such that it was impossible to load the bulk of the Mayflower crop in carloads and most of that and similar varieties were shipped by express, only three carloads of that variety having been shipped under refrigeration.

Present indications, according to experts, are that other early varieties will fall considerably short of the estimated carloading.

The first car of Uneedas was shipped on Thursday but there will be only light shipments of this variety for the next week or 10 days.

The crop of peaches from the district south of Macon is light this year for all varieties, especially Early Rose and Elbertas. South of Macon there will be only a few carloads of Early Rose and in all probability not more than a third of a crop of Elbertas from that section.

W. C. Bewley, general manager of the Georgia Peach Growers' Exchange, stated today that from present indications "the general quality of the fruit will be good, for which it is quite certain that there will be an active f. o. b. demand."

Mr. Bewley also stated that owing to the long period of dry weather and plenty of sunshine the fruit is not only comparatively clean and free from defects, but the early varieties are unusually well flavored and this condition always has stimulated consumer demand.

Never having held a public office, Mr. Park for years, however, has been active in the Georgia Bar Association and the Georgia Bankers' Association. With R. C. Norman, state tax commissioner, he is regarded as an outstanding authority on taxes, and represented the state in the recent income tax case which resulted in a supreme court decision upholding the law.

MOVEMENT OF GEORGIA PEACH CROP TO MARKETS BEGINS

COLD DAMAGES FRUITS IN WEST

Cold weather during early May caused considerable damage to fruits in western Colorado and the Pacific northwest. Apples and pears suffered greatest injury on the eastern slope of the Colorado. Peaches were not hurt so much. The apple crop was seriously affected in parts of Washington, and greater damage was done to apricots, cherries, pears and peaches. The damage was quite spotted, some of the leading fruit districts of Washington having escaped almost entirely. The total peach crop in 10 southern states will be about as light as last year. The first shipments of peaches has just been reported.

Recent timely rains have greatly improved the condition of potatoes and truck crops in a number of important areas, especially in the east. Dry weather still prevails in some sections and has seriously reduced crop prospects. However, the June supply to tomatoes from five second-early states is expected to be 30 per cent heavier than that of 1929, with an exceptionally large crop this season in eastern Texas. Prices of nearly all the important fruits and vegetables declined very materially last week. Onions were higher in southern Texas, as the season there approached an end. A good crop of strawberries is expected in the late group of states. The United States production of strawberries this season is estimated at 280 million quarts or 17 per cent less than last year. Peak movement of the present season has probably been completed. Tomatoes, cabbage and potatoes were all selling lower than the week before.

With both North and South Carolina now shipping potatoes in large quantities, that section will hold the interest of the trade for a few weeks. Movement of new potatoes is now twice that of the old stock. Cantaloupe prices dropped sharply as Imperial Valley shipments increased to nearly 400 cars daily. Lettuce movement from central California was only half as heavy as the week before and prices at shipping point strengthened slightly. The f. o. b. market for celery in southern California was firm. The Florida season was nearly ended. Ten-inch crates of locally grown Louisiana celery sold at $3.50 in New Orleans.

The carrot season opened in Mississippi but California supplied 320 of the 400 cars of carrots shopped last week. As movement of Alabama cucumbers increased to about 200 cars, bushel hampers declined at shipping points to a range of $1.25-1.35. Florida also furnished 200 cars of cucumbers and Texas 80 cars. The season opened in South Carolina. Green pea shipments increased to 250 cars, mostly from North Carolina. String beans required almost 500 cars; the season started in North Carolina but the bulk of the supply was from South Carolina. About 75 cars of watermelons were shipped compared with 965 cars a year ago. Combined movement of 31 fruits and vegetables increased slightly to 18,470 cars.

Cabbage Selling Lower.

Cabbage prices went down about as fast as they had gone up the week before, though movement held around 935 cars and was one-sixth lighter than a year ago. South Carolina was finished and the movement in Alabama decreased, but most other producing areas for spring cabbage increased their output. Shipments were particularly active in Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee and Virginia. About 275 cars each moved from Mississippi and Virginia. The Mississippi f.o.b. market was dull and sharply lower at $1.50-1.75 per barrel crate. City prices showed a wide range of $1.75-4.25 per hundred pounds. The 1-2-bushel hampers from South Carolina jobbed as low as $1.00-1.50, while some Virginia stock brought only 65c with top sales at $1.50.

Potato Prices Decline.

The season for North Carolina potatoes began with 10 cars, and shipments from South Carolina increased very rapidly to 1,345 cars for the week. The Carolinas will now be the center of greatest activity until Virginia starts. Decreases occurred in Florida, Alabama, Louisiana and Texas, although those states still ranged between 200 and 700 cars each. Georgia was moving quite a few potatoes and California was becoming active. Total output of 3,885 cars of new stock was nearly double that of a year ago. Old stock still required 1,865 cars, or one-fourth less than last year. Maine sent 1,385 and the north central 360 cars to market. F.o.b prices of sacked Green Mountains declined 55c per hundred points at Aroostock county points to a range of $1.70-1.85. The market was lower also in New York and Wisconsin around $2.50. Southern Bliss Triumphs declined about 50c in several shipping areas to a f.o.b range of $2.25-2.75 per hundred pound sack. Terminal markets were lower on all potatoes with Florida and South Carolina barrels at $5.00-7.75 and sacked Triumphs at $2.75-3.75. Chicago carlot market for old potatoes was 25c lower on all receipts. Northern round whites sold in that city at $2.50-2.75 per hundred pounds and Idaho russet Burbanks at $3.50-3.70. Maine Green Mountains were weaker in the east at $2.25-3.65. Bliss Triumphs, grown in Georgia, sold on the Atlanta market at $5.50 per barrel.

Good Late Berry Crop.

Indications are that the strawberry crop in 10 late shipping states may be 74,558,000 quarts, or only three per cent less than last season. Michigan expects about one-third more berries than last year and a slight increase appears certain for New York and Pennsylvania, but most other late states show decreased production. The total estimated crop, 280,000,000 quarts of strawberries this season, would be 17 per cent less than the 1929 crop. Prospects in the state of Washington have been improved by rains and more favorable growing conditions. Good quality fruit is expected. Berries, marketed fresh, may return as much as $2 per crate, or one-third more than last season. Packers in Washington are reported to be offering a premium of 7 or 8 cents per pound for hulled berries.

Strawberry shipments last week decreased somewhat to a total 1,020 cars. Noticeable decreases were reported in Arkansas, Tennessee, North Carolina and the Norfolk section of Birginia, but increased movement was shown in most other states and on the Eastern Shore, Missouri took first place last week with 300 cars, followed by Kentucky and Tennessee with 170 each. The season began in Delaware, prices were firm to higher on the eastern shore but slightly lower in Missouri. City prices held fairly well.

Twenty-four crates of Aromas in southwestern Missouri ranged $4.75-5.00. Movement for the current season may be only about half that of last year. A wide range of from three to seven dollars cash to growers prevailed on 32-quart crates of various varieties of berries on the eastern shore peninsula. City dealers quoted these eastern berries at $3.50-7.50 per crate or 10-22c per quart. The 32-quart crates from North Carolina were jobbing at $4-7.00 with sales on a quart basis at 17-22c. Chicago reported 24-quart crates of Aromas from Illinois at $4-4.50 and 24-pint crates of Klondikes from Louisiana at $2.50-2.75. 24-quart containers of Kentucky Aromas were jobbing generally at $5.75-7.50, compared with receipts from Tennessee at $2.75-6.00, and Missouri berries at $5.50-7.50. Some eastern markets made sales of Missouri Aromas on a quart basis at 15-25c. Peak of the strawberry movement for 1930 has probably been passed.

Peaches Now Moving.

The first car of Georgia peaches and the first two cars from California moved to market last week. These initial shipments of the 1930 season were about one week later than those of last year. Present are for a relatively light crop of this fruit, particularly in the early southern area. At the opening of May, general condition of peaches in 10 southern states averaged only 45 per cent of normal, compared with 67 per cent a year ago. The probable crop of 11,668,000 bushels in this group of states would be about equal to the short crop of 1929 and 35 per cent lighter than the five-year average for the group. Heavier production than last season is expected in the five states from North Carolina to Alabama, but in the five states further west prospects are for much lighter production than that of 1929. Arkansas and Oklahoma will have extremely light crops, and Texas may have only about half as many peaches as last year. North Carolina expects 1,900,000 bushels or nearly an average crop. If Georgia produces 5,600,000 bushels, as now anticipated, it will have about twice as many as last season but one-third less than the five-year average for that state. South Carolina and Alabama, with possibly 1,000,000 bushels each, would have double their 1929 crop. Severe low temperatures reduced production prospects in many other states. Present expectations are for 7,600 carloads of this fruit from Georgia, or 44 per cent more than last season's very light shipments, but this would still be a much smaller movement than in any other year since last 1922. No peaches this year should be of good size. Present indications are for 3,700 cars of Elbertas in Georgia, compared with 2,900 last season, and 2,600 cars of Hileys as against 1,200 cars in 1920. Georgia Belles and other late varieties of peaches are expected to show a 25 per cent increase this year.

Onion Prices Advance.

Onions were the exception to the rule in produce markets last week. Prices of Texas onions advanced considerably at shipping points, with best Yellow Bermudas ranging $1.10-1.25 per crate and Crystal Wax stock at $1.25-1.35. Terminal markets were slightly stronger at a general range of $1.00-1.75. Movement from Texas decreased to 710 cars but Southern California increased to 150. The central and northern districts of California also began shipping. One carload of onions was reported from Louisiana. Only 4 cars came from Egypt. The Indiana onion fields were looking good after recent rains. Acreage in that state is about the same as last year. Prospects in Kentucky were rather poor, but rainfall helps the situation materially. Onion plants in Allegen county, Michigan never looked better at this season of the year. Acreage has been increased about 15 per cent over that of 1929. Wind storms blew out much of the onion seed in light soils in Hardin county, Ohio, but the acreage has all been replanted.

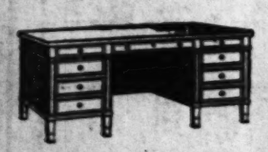

Many Tomatoes Expected.

With the opening of the tomato season in Mississippi, East Texas, South Carolina and Ohio, supplies during the next month should be quite heavy. Mississippi expects 1,685,000 bushels or only slightly more than in 1929, but East Texas may have a very large crop of 2,116,000 bushels from the greatly increased acreage in that section. South Carolina, Georgia and Louisiana together expect a total of 538,000 bushels, as against 383,000 last season. These five states may have a tomato crop about 30 per cent larger than their 1929 production.

Cantaloupe Markets Active.

Cantaloupe shipments from Imperial valley increased very rapidly to 2,315 cars as against 620 a year ago. Standard crates for eastern markets declined to $1.50-1.60 at shipping points.

Mrs. Sanford Issues Greetings To Georgia Clubwomen Today

My tardiness in expressing to the clubwomen of the state my appreciation of the honor conferred on me in electing me president of the Georgia Federation is no index of my gratitude. I am both appreciative of and grateful for the many kindnesses shown me, and I value highly your kindness, your love, and your confidence. That I may conduct the affairs of the federation with credit to you and to me is my wish. With your continued co-operation and confidence all will be well.

Since my return from the Macon convention I have been extremely busy writing letters and working out plans for the federation—matters that had to have my immediate attention. Furthermore, I have been busy with preparation incident to attending the general federation meeting in Denver on June 4. I wish it were possible for a large number of the federation members to attend the Denver meeting. An instructive program has been arranged and I am sure the clubwomen would gather much information and inspiration.

When I was in Macon I thought I saw many evidences of enthusiasm along many lines and I hope this enthusiasm may continue. With live, active, progressive district presidents and club presidents and with clubwomen awake to the responsibilities involved in club membership there is every reason to know that the federation will continue its onward, upward movement.

Someone has said that "enthusiasm tramples over prejudice and opposition, spurns inaction, storms the citadel of its object, and like an avalanche overwhelms all obstacles; it is faith in action, and faith and initiative rightly combined remove barriers and achieve the miraculous." May you continue to keep the germ of enthusiasm afloat in your work, and to carry it in your attitude and manner, for it means joy and pleasure and satisfaction in your every undertaking.

Until my return from Denver about June 16, I shall have to let all matters remain as they are. I hope to see some of you in Denver and many of you at the club institute in July. Let me again express my sincere appreciation and love to each clubwoman.

GRACE Mc. SANFORD,
(Mrs. S. V. Sanford)
President of Georgia Federation, Athens.

Will Invest Funds.

In acceptance of the terms of this will the trustees of Tallulah Falls school will invest these funds and provide for young girls at Tallulah Falls school at an annual cost of $150, so far as the interest will permit; the name of Sallie Sanders Hickey being used for all time in these awards. Mrs. Hickey was the daughter of W. C. Sanders, of Atlanta, a leader in the business life of the city and a member of the widely known firm of Inman & Sanders, cotton merchants. She was the mother of three sons. Mr. Hickey, who was a native of Virginia, came to Atlanta in his early manhood and was for many years a leader in the business and civic life of Atlanta and the south. Mr. Hickey was, for a number of years before his death, a generous friend of Tallulah Falls Industrial school, having established at an earlier time the William Sanders Hickey perpetual scholarship of $2,000 to provide there for one boy in perpetuity in memory of his son, this gift being separate and distinct from the Sallie Sanders Hickey Memorial Fund as set up by his will. Mr. Hickey, who passed away at his home on Wesley road in Atlanta on May 17, 1929, is survived by his wife, who was Miss Ada Alexander, the daughter of Dr. James F. Alexander, a beloved physician of Atlanta's earlier days. Mrs. Hickey is a trustee of Tallulah Falls school and is the donor of the Ada Reynolds Alexander perpetual scholarship which is the permanent memorial to her mother, the late Mrs. James F. Alexander. This scholarship is a twin memorial of the Nannie Reynolds Maddox perpetual scholarship, created by Mrs. Henry S. Jackson, the late Mrs. Robert F. Maddox. Mrs. Maddox and Mrs. Alexander were sisters and their daughters, Mrs. James E. Hickey and Mrs. Henry S. Jackson, who have honored their mothers with perpetual scholarship memorials at Tallulah Falls school are cousins.

Community Clubhouse Is in Washington, Ga.

Wynnellington, the historic house in Washington, Ga., houses the community clubhouse for women whose broad vision culminated after long years of work, in establishing a place in which women's activities will be launched. This splendid community clubhouse, opened last January, is a distinct ornament to the town representing the fruition of well laid plans of the several women's clubs in Washington, developed over a period of more than 10 years.

It was purchased last September and moved to its present location on the corner of Court street and Alexander avenue. It was remodeled, repainted and well appointed for the uses for which it will serve. Representing one of the oldest residences of Washington noted for the beauty of its colonial homes, the old mantles and original wainscoting have been retained, and the colonial lines of the building preserved, giving it an air that is charming and distinctive its picturesque feature date from the time when lumber was hand-made and fastened with hard wood pegs, instead of nails, and the window panes show evidence of colonial manufacture.

With the assistance of the city and county forces, the club lot was graded, landscaped, and made attractive with grass, clubs and shrubs. The lot was purchased by Washington Woman's Club, U. D. C.'s and D. A. R.'s in 1919. The property as it stands today represents an investment of between $7,000 and $8,000 and a contribution to the city's development and betterment by these civic and patriotic clubs.

Among the gifts received to aid in equipping the club are the entire furnishing formerly owned by the legion auxiliary including a piano; from D. A. R.'s electric fixtures in keeping with the rooms, from Junior Woman's Club, check for $317, and an electric range from the Washington Light & Power Company and from the public money contributions amounting to $130. The club will be used as a community center for other clubs to hold meetings.

Mrs. Woodward Issues Card.

According to the custom of the Student Aid Foundation, the committee will take no action on applications from June 15 until August 15, and during these two months the books will be closed, except for the receipt of payments.

MRS. DAVID WOODWARD,
Chairman.

Dalton Club Holds Meeting at Mrs. Judd's

The final meeting for the current year was held at Oneonta, home of the president, Mrs. M. E. Judd, on Friday, with a record attendance. Annual reports were a feature of the business session, and the treasurer of the building fund told of the gradual cutting down of the clubhouse debt till it is confidently expected that one more year will see it a thing of the past and the club able to undertake some more elaborate form of work than has been possible in the last five years. The library committee reported more than 7,000 books circulated during the past year and gifts totaling some 500 volumes of new books. Committees for the various activities of the club were appointed, including one to arrange for a bridge and rook tournament at the clubhouse in the near future, of which Miss Annie Horne is chairman, and a program committee. The organization was invited to meet during the summer to sew on layettes and other necessities for the county nurse, these meetings being held at Oneonta at intervals as the need arises. The club feels deeply the honor conferred by the election of the president to be first vice president of the state federation and listened with interest to Mrs. Judd's description of the most interesting session recently held in Macon. Mrs. H. J. Smith told of the recent meeting of the seventh district executive board, of which she is a member. After the business session the picnic supper was enjoyed in the sun room, the weather being inclement. The next regular meeting will be held in July, when Robert Loveman Day is celebrated as an annual affair, the late poet's family having been the original owners of the house now the home of the club and having made it possible for the organization to obtain this valuable piece of property as clubhouse and library building.

Mrs. Snelling Issues Greetings To Clubwomen

Greeting: Now is the winter of our discontent made glorious by the summer sun" and anticipation of the good and profitable things the summer brings. The club institute program as planned by Mrs. W. N. Harder brings to the club women of Georgia a splendid privilege for instruction. The outline of the program as given below carries on the constructive plans of previous years.

Inquiries and interest already give promise of a good attendance. Hotels will give special rates when more than one occupy a room.

The institute will be entertained at luncheon each day. Tallulah Falls Birthday cake given by the ninth district will cut on the July 9; with an interesting program of "Tallulah, The Light of the Mountains." Your long time chairman calls again for the old as well as many new friends to come to Athens and the university to profit and enjoy the success of another year of club institute. Sessions will be held in Memorial Hall.

Mrs. C. M. Snelling, of Athens, club institute chairman.

Mrs. Fitzpatrick's Report on Ella F. White Fund.

Mrs. Z. I. Fitzpatrick, chairman of the Ella F. White Memorial Endowment fund made the following report at the Macon biennial convention in May. She said:

"The endowment of the Georgia federation is a memorial to a departed past president who died in the service of the federation and we intend it shall be a living, growing appreciation of her services to our organization, as well as an aid in giving a strong, steady income. The plan is 25 cents per capita each year for three years, or 75 cents per capita in one payment. New clubs are not exempt. The principal is to form a perpetual trust fund, only the interest to be utilized to meet growing demands of the federation. The policy of investment is strictly legal securities and because of such safe securities the rate of interest is lower than individuals might make.

"Like dividends from a paid-up insurance policy your state endowment interest has given you a way to meet a just call from the general federation of its foundation thus saving the individual club from an extra demand at this trying time in club finances. Now, will not for clubs that have not met the 75 cents per capita to the Ella F. White Memorial endowment in gratitude, answer the call to your state endowment that has helped so wonderfully in time of need? The second and eleventh districts have met the apportionment in full and are enjoying a dignified position on the honor roll free from any further call from this plan, and I am sure your sense of justice to the clubs that have paid, as well as your desire to serve your federation in its good works will prompt you to pay in full at once. Your chairman and secretary as well as the distriet chairman have given much time by constant reminders to raising this endowment. Our loving attention will continue until every club is on the honor roll. Mrs. John E. Talmadge, Jr., is secretary and the trustees are Mesdames H. H. Tift, H. H. Perry and J. Lindsay Johnson.

Mrs. Clay Ryals Gives Convention Talk

McRae Civic Improvement Club met Tuesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. O. F. McRae, with Mrs. J. I. McMillan, the president, presiding. A silver tea is being planned for July 9 to celebrate the 21st birthday of the Tallulah Falls school, which is owned and operated by the Federated Clubs of Georgia. This will be carried out through the entire district and the funds raised will be used for a scholarship from this district. The memorial committee from the Civic Club will sponsor a baseball game Thursday afternoon to defray the expenses of the Confederate veterans at the reunion in Biloxi, Miss.

Mrs. Clay Ryals gave a splendid report of the convention which she attended in Macon, as delegate from the Improvement Club and also in an official capacity, being treasurer of the 12th district. She was especially honored at this convention, having won the gold vase which was being offered for the first district reporting dues paid 100 per cent. Among the ideas she brought back from the convention was the establishing of municipal markets in small towns in the various districts, these markets to be sponsored by the local civic clubs. A committee composed of Mrs. Clay Ryals, Mrs. C. A. Ryals, Mrs. J. H. Girardeau, Mrs. W. O. Brooks and Mrs. Rosalie Hollomon was appointed to investigate the advisability of such a market in McRae.

The program topic was, "Mothers," and opened with an inspiring talk by Mrs. Fred Smith, her subject being "Mothers of Yesterday." Mrs. Roger Dunford, who has an exquisite soprano voice, sang "Mother Machree" and "Mother of Mine." Little Miss Eva Mae Smith gave a delightful musical reading, "When Mother Sang to Me," accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Fred Smith. Mrs. J. T. Windsor, in a most impressive manner, presented her version of the "Modern Mother," or mothers of today. At the conclusion of the program, Mrs. C. A. Ryals, who has been program chairman for four years and who has arranged many original and interesting programs, presented Mrs. W. E. Swinney with a vase of Easter lilies, Mrs. Swinney being the oldest club mother present at this meeting. The hostesses were Mrs. C. F. McRae and Mrs. A. W. Waller, assisted by Mesdames Paul Rogle and C. W. Stout.

Marietta Club Garden Section Makes Notable Pilgrimage

Garden section of Marietta Woman's Club closed a most successful year with a pilgrimage to four gardens, illustrating the different types of gardens, the first thing being the green garden of Mrs. William Coursan, with the beautiful old trees of many kinds—many of which the charming hostess explained had a history of over 100 years. The land on which they stand being a direct grant from the Cherokee Indians. In this same garden is a hemlock hedge, over six feet in height and beautifully clipt, without a single break for about 200 feet. This, with a shaped privet hedge, much lower, serves as a background for the beautiful and justly famous rose arbor. Tall magnolias in full bloom vie with dark pines to do honor to their environment. The front of the house has a formal box planting outlining a lovely old sundial and in a distant corner a bird bath is a constant invitation to feathered friends. A green garden can be a gracious place to sit and rest and dream, but the pilgrims must go on.

Mrs. Brumby's Garden.

The rock garden of Mrs. Thomas Brumby claimed the attention. Laid out by the son of the gracious hostess it gives promise of being "a thing of beauty and a joy forever." A winding walk and steps of rock take you down to a lovely irregular pool with natural rock seats to sit and watch the water trickling from under the rocks. This garden has no sense of having been "made." It surely must have grown there, you feel, until it is explained to you that not a single rock was there a few short weeks ago and that is the true feeling that a garden should give you—that it is natural.

Mrs. McNeel's Garden.

The formal garden at the home of Mrs. Morgan McNeel, Sr., was next visited. The central attraction of this being an exquisite marble pool, deep enough, our hostess explained, for the grandchildren to bathe in, and the clear water from the lovely blue lining of the pool would surely be an invitation to grown ups too on a hot day. A large rose bed on each side of the marble stepping stones make one think of some of the lovely old world gardens, and of ladies in hoop skirts walking on the lawn in the cool of the evening. Flower borders with every known species of flower, shrub and plant, outline this lovely spot, while chairs and tables pop up at most unexpected places. We found both very useful when our charming hostess served delicious refreshments which, after all our exclamations of admiration and astonishment, were very much appreciated. This garden is beautifully balanced and through the service garden we caught glimpses of a kitchen garden and orchard. Such a lovely, lovely place, with old Kenesaw looking down and holding back the cold north wind.

The Little Garden.

The little garden was the last precious memory to carry home being the home of Mrs. Frank McNeel, who shows in her little lily pool her love of wild plants and her great generosity in growing for others. The most exquisite Japanese Iris presided over this attractive little garden with its sweet old-fashioned flowers and its sense of peace and cosiness and the slim, young hostess looking like one of her own flowers. Perhaps it was the flowers, perhaps it was the graciousness of the women, perhaps—well we do know that that "we are nearer God's heart in a garden than anywhere else on earth," but our pilgrimage was such a lovely thing to close our year with. Mrs. Herbert E. Hague, of Marietta, chairman of the garden committee.

Athens Club Honors Mrs. Sanford At Reception Given in Historic House

The historic club house of the Athens Woman's Club was in gala array last Thursday, as a special honor to the newly-elected president of Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, Mrs. S. V. Sanford, who for many years served the club as recording secretary and as its president. The reception was attended by the heads of civic organizations in Athens, the club members and district club officers. Flowers from the gardens of the members adorned the stately rooms, whose long windows and heavy cornices are so reminiscent of the ante-bellum days of its splendor. The club home was built over half a century ago; its tall columns and dignified exterior have been lighted for many a festive occasion during the days of Chief Justice Lumpkin, whose home it was for many years, then later school girls' laughter resounded through its halls for here the Misses Sosnowski had their far-famed boarding school in the nineties.

Receiving with Mrs. T. F. Green, president of the club, were three past presidents, Mrs. Lamar Rucker, now corresponding secretary, Georgia federation; Mrs. C. M. Suelling, who is chairman of the club institute, and Mrs. H. B. Ritchie, now president of the eighth district, also Mrs. John E. Talmadge, A. G. Dudley, Burton Ferguson, Joseph Jarrell, H. M. Holden, chairman Colonial Dames; R. J. Turner, M. B. Wingfield, W. D. Beacham, and Miss Sarah Moss. The hostesses were Miss Moena Michael, Mrs. A. S. Parker, Luther Nelson, J. K. Patrick, D. L. Earnest, J. Phil Campbell, C. A. Vernooy, Miss Erna Proctor, Mrs. Hope Smith, and E. H. Rhodes. The refreshment committee included Mrs. E. R. Hodgson, W. O. Payne, W. H. Cabiniss, Howard Benson, A. W. Abney, A. G. Dudley, Guy Whelchel, Brantley Dozier, and Miss Coppinger.

The invitation committee included Mrs. M. B. Wingfield, H. B. Ritchie, W. D. Beacham; committee on decorations, Mrs. Luther Nelson, chairman, H. M. Holden, Joseph Jarrell, T. P. Stanley, Joel Wier, W. R. Jennings, J. Phil Campbell, C. M. Snelling, D. L. Earnest; telephone committee included Mrs. J. K. Patrick, chairman; C. H. Janie McCrary, W. H. Benson, W. O. Payne, L. M. Sheffer, and T. W. Paschal.

Mrs. Hal Hutchens Is Elected Head Of Dallas Club

Dallas Woman's Club has elected Mrs. Hal Hutchens, president; Mrs. W. F. Byrd, first vice president; Mrs. Clarence Foster, second vice president; Mrs. Wendell Welch, secretary; Mrs. Joe Matthews, assistant secretary; Mrs. R. R. Lee, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Waitcel Bullock, treasurer; Mrs. C. B. McGarity, parliamentarian, and Miss Bessie Crew, auditor.

Reports of the year's work were made by the chairmen of standing committees and showed that every department of the club had been active and many things for the good of Dallas and Paulding county had been accomplished. Dallas club is one of the most outstanding in the seventh district.

A Mother's Day program was given, in which Miss Sarah Anderson gave a reading and Miss Florabel McGoogan sang a solo. Miss McGoogan presented her plan of the contest in the county among the girls of the Four-H clubs, in which the girls were beautifying their rooms. The club voted to donate two prizes to be given the girls in the county making the best showing in the contest. Mesdames A. O. Colquitt, Barna Christian and Miss Bessie Crew were hostesses at the last meeting.

The room contest of the girls in the Four-H clubs of the county is creating much interest and friendly rivalry. While the contest is a statewide movement, the Woman's Club of Dallas has voted to sponsor it as a county and will give two valuable prizes to the girls in the county who make the best showing. Miss Florabel McGoogan, home demonstration agent, has started the move and the girls themselves are doing the work. A committee from the Woman's Club will be the judges. These girls are showing that attractive dressing tables can be made from dry goods boxes, that sheets that are worn in the center can be cut in two, hemmed and dyed and made into attractive draperies, and many other things, with a minimum expenditure, can be made an asset to a girl's room. This is one of the most worthwhile contests ever held in the county and much pleasure and benefit will be derived by those who enter.

Fort Valley's picturesque city park, "Sidney Lanier," an achievement of Fort Valley Woman's Club, presented the setting Tuesday afternoon which marked the last meeting of clubwomen until after the summer recess. The park, one of the prettiest parks in the state, was taken over a number of years ago by the clubwomen and from a grassy, ugly plot has been made into a charming spot and at the suggestion of the clubwomen the city officially gave it the name of "Sidney Lanier" in honor of Georgia's beloved poet.

Reports of Year's Work Read At Meeting of Augusta Woman's Club

The following reports read at the annual meeting Tuesday of the Augusta Woman's Club will be read with interest not only by clubwomen but by the public at large as they give a comprehensive idea of the activities of this large and important organization that plays an important part in the life of the community.

President's Report.

Three experiments have been tried this year and each has proven quite worth while. First, a budget as a guide in administering club affairs has been very helpful. Second, the luncheons have been served by an experienced caterer, leaving the chairman free to attend executive board meetings. Third, a complete record of all club activities has been compiled by the members and placed in the clubhouse. The club is deeply indebted to the club editor, Augusta Chronicle and the society editor, Augusta Herald, for splendid publicity, also to Mrs. H. L. Avery for the efficient handling of the club luncheons. The club—at no monetary expense whatever—was privileged to act as official hostess to the ladies attending the Southeastern Division, National Electric Light Association, held in Augusta, April 15-18, and as an expression of their appreciation the club was presented by the convention officials with a beautiful electric refrigerator. It is really the part of department chairmen to present the report of their year's work and to the president the privilege of calling to your attention the forces that are quietly yet powerfully moulding the character of the club. The club holds an important place in the community and your executive board has always carefully guarded its reputation, avoiding hasty or ill-advised action and endeavoring to make every activity bear the mark of distinction. Any woman who serves the club must be inspired and ennobled by the work committed to her. Throughout my administration I have been keenly sensible of our debt to my predecessors in office. They gave generously of their time and have left behind them worthwhile evidence of earnest, unselfish devotion to the trust committed to them. All your present efforts would have been in vain but for the hearty co-operation which she has received, and when I realize just how much the 8 officers and 43 chairmen have done I am deeply grateful, and to them is due the praise for a successful year. Many of our members have been loyal and faithful and I trust that the coming year will see all of our women taking an active part in the work. It is interesting to consider the source of unity, fidelity and devotion of our club members. There is a great difference of ages in our membership, drawn from many social groups and creeds, yet we meet week after week in tolerance and harmony, each appreciating the others' gifts, all working together for the good of ourselves, our homes, our city and our nation.

MARY TRUSLOW MANNING,

Mrs. T. J. Hamilton, chairman of art, brought an interesting display of pottery to the club and also a display of etchings and oil paints by a New York artist, Mrs. W. T. Elmore.

Mrs. E. M. Espy, chairman of literature, feels that the most important work accomplished by her division was the observance of Book Week, when so many interesting books were given to the library and so many children took part in the story hour. Mrs. Espy also delighted the club with a very interesting program featuring our own Georgia poets.

Mrs. Mims Urges Chapters Celebrate Flag Day June 14

Mrs. J. L. Mims, state chairman of Flag Day, issues the following message to D. A. R. chapter regents:

"June 14 is Flag Day, in commemoration of the day in 1777 on which congress proclaimed the Stars and Stripes the national standard of the United States. A day when we should give thanks for our country and honor its flag. Never has our beloved emblem looked more resplendent; never has it waved from so many different elevations, and never have its sentiments and standards so thrilled the soul of the American patriot as today. The brilliant pronouncement in the star-studded blue and the white and red stripes of its high standards of liberty, fraternity and equality, with its doctrines of courage for the brave and protection of the weak, command the respect and honor of the whole world. So, with love and soul-thrilling gratitude, it must be lifted high from every dwelling throughout this great republic, on June 14, our nation's Flag Day. Our flag has always embodied the ideals of our forefathers, the brave deeds of the pioneers, the sacrifice and fortitude of our women. It is fitting that we, as Daughters of the American Revolution, directly descended from patriotic ancestors, should secure a more widespread display of the flag and an attitude of respect and reverence for it on the part of the general public. To do this chapters should plan for the celebration in some fitting way of Flag Day.

Plan for a program in observance of the day at your June chapter meeting. In case your chapter has ceased activities before this date let me stress the importance of a called meeting to plan for a program on that day. As your state chairman I would suggest papers or open discussions on the following subjects: 'The Birth of the Flag,' 'Flag Day and Its Significance,' 'What Determined the Position of Each Star on the Flag?,' 'What Rank Has Georgia on the Flag?'.

"I urge you, chapter regents, to lift our standards high on June 14:

"'Let it rise! Let it rise! Till it meet the sun in its coming:
Let the earliest light of the morning gild it—
And the parting day linger and play on its summit.'"

Mrs. Mell Knox Issues Request.

Mrs. Mell Knox, first vice regent of Georgia, asks that all chapters send in the name of their selected officers at once to her at Social Circle. This is most important. Mrs. Knox is thorough and capable and wants these names so that they might be published in the proceedings for this year.

NEWS of STAGE and SCREEN

EDITED by RALPH T. JONES

by Ralph T. Jones

It is with genuine regret that Atlanta playgoers approach the end of the spring production season of the Erlanger Theater Players. After "Broken Dishes," this week, we bid au revoir, for a few months, to Margaret Brayton, Butler Hixon, Arthur Jacobson, Melba Palmer, Jean Arden, Roy Elkins, Frank Joyner, Albert DeGuerre, Bob Hicks, Caroline West, Harry McKee and the rest. In parting let the last word be an assurance that they won't fail to come back in August to stay with us through all the fall and winter and spring months to follow.

There is no denying that advertising men and press agents use correct adjectives in announcing their coming talking screen attractions. At least, sometimes. For instance, have you noticed the advertising for "Ingagi" on the Fox screen next week? It reads like this:

"Ingagi — gorillas — wild women — UNBELIEVABLE!"

Undoubtedly.

Atlanta is famous for the beauty of its womanhood. Walk down Peachtree any day and find ample reason for this fame. Which should make the announcement of the Bradley Bathing Girl Revue at Keith's Georgia this week a compelling lure for all lovers of feminine pulchritude.

The management selected 12 of the shapeliest girls in all the city to act as models for the swimming suit style show which will parade across the stage. Front row seats, though in tremendous demand, have not been advanced in price, I understand.

Earle Griggs, popular figure on film row for lo, these many years, enjoyed two important events last week. In the first place he assumed his duties as press agent for the Fox theater, succeeding Briggs Pekor. In the second place—but he made me promise not to tell. Anyway, it was a really tremendous event and, if you're curious, phone Earle at Jackson 3143.

In the opinion of this reviewer, "King of Jazz" is by far the most tremendous and gorgeous thing of its kind the vocal screen has yet achieved. Just what it is, is hard to define. Not a "revue" as we have become accustomed to screen revues—not a band concert, though Paul Whiteman and his world famous band are the stars of the production—and not "vaudeville" though there is more variety and mort real artistic entertainment than any vaudeville program ever contained.

Incidentally, "King of Jazz" is the attraction at the Capital this week. The picture is so tremendous that there will be no stage show for the week, but there is a short comedy, the best thing yet done by those peculiar comedians, Laurel and Hardy.

• • •

Manager Swint, of the Ponce de Leon theater, is experimenting with an original idea at his popular neighborhood house. Every Friday night he is offering, instead of the regular feature picture, a program of Vitaphone vaudevile acts. He secures performers for this screen vaudeville offering who never, for all the money of the treasury, could be found together on one stage in the flesh. Such famous stars as Elsie Janis, Maddame Alda, the Six Brown Brothers and others all on one bill.

Haven't seen his show but it sounds fascinating and, if my secret agents report it one-half as good as it sounds, will slip around and see it one of these Friday evenings.

Save up your change, folks, for the big Masonic Club Milk Fund benefit at the Capital the week of June 23. Feature picture is Marion Davies in "The Floradora Girl." A gorgeous local Toyland Revue on the stage. And the chance to pay for a few bottles of good milk for the little patients at the Scottish Rite hospital. What an opportunity!

This "Mystery Man," booked for the Rialto theater this week, is said to be uncanny in his ability to do all, and more, of the unbelievable stunts the late Harry Houdine used to perform. Anyway, the picture about high school wild parties, "The Rampant Age," should be worth seeing for itself alone.

The constant growth in popularity of Maurice Chavalier, French star of stage and talking screen, who comes to Keith's Georgia this week in his latest effort, "The Big Pond," is one of the most encouraging signs about American picture audiences. While Chevalier has the best of all box office appeals—the humor that everybody likes—it is still true that he is especially popular with people of sufficient intelligence to like their fun sophisticated. Therefore, the growth of his popularity demonstrates that audiences are growing more intelligent and more sophisticated. There are few left today to whom such an artist as Chevalier would appeal, in vulgar parlance, as a "pain in the neck."

Which, as said, is a good sign.

Remember lovely little blonde Mary Adams? The Atlanta girl who abandoned Girls' High for a career on the stage and played here last winter as the leading lady in "A Connecticut Yankee." Had a telegram from her last week. Here it is:

OPENING IN ATLANTIC CITY JUNE 2, NEW YORK CITY JUNE 9 WITH 'ARTISTS AND MODELS.' THE SHOW OF 'DEAR LOVE,' FROM LONDON, HAS BEEN INSERTED IN THE REVIEW. I HOPE TO MAKE THE LEADING PART OF SUSANNE BETTER THAN MY ALISANDE OF THE 'CONNECTICUT YANKEE' COMPANY. MY BEST TO THE HOME TOWN.—MARY.

"Men Without Women" are positively no such thing.

It has long been known that safety pins "Hold Everything."

Although Technicolor tints some of the scenes, Al Jolson's "Mammy" is not all colored.

Talking Screens for Week Carry Us From Pathos to Gorillas

Variety marks the screen offerings for the week. Above, at top, left, are seen Maurice Chevalier and Claudette Colbert in a scene from the finest picture yet made by the popular French star—"The Big Pond," the featured attraction at Keith's Georgia. Next, in the oval, is a glimpse of one of the gorgeous sequences in "King of Jazz" in which Paul Whiteman and his band come to the Capitol screen. The artist in the picture above, by the way, is John Boles, who sings some splendid new songs in the feature. At upper right is a scene from "Song of the Flame" romance with music with a story of the Russian revolution as the setting. Lower left is a scene from "The Rampant Age," one of the most sensational talkies dealing with the wildness of modern youth of about high schoolage. And at the lower right is a scene from "Ingagi," African hunt picture, which is to show at the Fox. "Ingagi," by the way, is the native word for "Gorilla," and you can see where the title comes from.

Voice of Noah Beery Is Heard At Paramount

"The Song of the Flame" Reveals Fine Bass Voice of Villain Portrayer.

Noah Beery has been a screen villian for a long time. It has even been said that he enjoys his villainous roles. So, in the well-known New York stage musical romance, "Song of the Flame," which will be the feature attraction at the Paramount theater during the week starting Monday, Beery, much to his own satisfaction, remains a dyed-in-the-wool bad man, this time playing a prominent part as a revolutionary leader.

But Beery's villainous tendencies will be of secondary interest to audiences. In "Song of the Flame," for the first time in his screen career, he sings several songs. Although it may come as a surprise to many, Beery is revealed as an accomplished artist, singing in a deep resounding base voice that is thoroughly delightful.

Beery's singing ability, however, is not a new found accomplishment. At one time he was a member of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, singing in such well-known operas as "Aida" and "Il Trovatore." This was before his debut on the them silent screen. Now, through the advent of screen audibility, it seems that he will revert to his first love, music.

In addition to Beery, "Song of the Flame," features those up and coming young players, Bernice Claire and Alexander Gray, who scored so favorably in "No, No, Nanette." In this picture they prove as charming as in their first success, sing any number of songs, and are the central figures of a turbulent, exciting romance.

Some of the songs which Miss Claire, Gray and Beery sing are "Wander Away," "Song of the Flame," "Cossack Love Song," "When Love Calls," "Passing Fancy" and "One Little Drink." The music is the work of George Gershwin, the celebrated American composer, and Herbert Stothart. The picture is photographed entirely in natural colors.

A medley of popular hits by Walter Donaldson, America's most prolific and successful composer, will be offered by Gladys Lyle at the console of the Wurlitzer.

Other film subjects on the week's program include a special recording 1,500 Annapolis midshipmen singing the Naval Academy song, "Anchors A-Weigh." This is said to be one of the most inspiring subjects yet recorded for the audible screen. Then there will be a slapstick comedy, entitled "The Madhouse," and a new issue of Paramount Sound News.

One reason why Manhattan Island shows a startling decrease in population, much to the consternation of local merchants, can be traced to the records of the building department during 1929. In that year not a single apartment house was erected to fit the purse of either the poor or middle class. The dwellings, which were constructed were plainly for the rich; with the result that the white collar slaves are driven to the suburbs or the adjoining counties where rents are more reasonable.

For excellent stage work in the theater at this writing . . . the convicts of "The Last Mile" nervously awaiting an electrocution . . . Beulah Bondi in her eighteenth shrewish month as the harridan in "Street Scene" . . . Alfred Helton blackmailing Frank Morgan with sly gusto in "Topaz" . . . Katharine Cornell feeding arsenic to an unnecessary lover in "Dishonored Lady" . . . Sidney Toler and Leila Bennett, the funniest iceman and maid of the year, in "It's a Wise Child" . . . the simple and grand fervor of the entire cast of "The Green Pastures." . . .

The next national upheaval may be a straw vote on public favor as between dumb films and talkies.

'Broken Dishes' Ends Erlanger Spring Season This Week

"Broken Dishes," comedy hit of the present season at the Ritz theater, New York, has been chosen by the Erlanger Theater Players as their vehicle for this, the final week of their spring production season at the Erlanger theater.

Next Saturday night the popular players will say au revoir to Atlanta until next August, when they will return to open a 1930-31 season of stage productions that promises, if possible, to even excel the one just closing in popular appeal.

The theater, the management announces, will present a number of the most important sound and talking picture releases of the year as road shows, during the summer months. This policy will be inaugurated next Monday night with Universal's great picture, "All Quiet on the Western Front," which has been a sensational success wherever shown.

"Broken Dishes" was written by Martin Flavin, author of "Grist of the Mill," "Criminal Gods," "Children of the Moon" and other hits. It was described by the critic of the New York American as "one of the most humorous flashes that has illuminated a Broadway stage in two decades."

Frank Joyner, the popular character man of the Erlanger Theater Players, has the biggest opportunity yet offered him locally in this play. He plays the role of "Pa" Bumpstead, about whom the entire action of the piece revolves.

The play opens in the living room of the Bumpsteads in a small midwestern town. It is about 6:30 of a winter's evening and Ma and the two older girls, Myra and Mabel, are laying down the law to the younger daughter, Elaine, with no evidence of sympathy or kindliness. The topic of their wrath, and scorn, is the romance that is budding between Elaine and Billy Clark, the delivery boy. It is promptly demonstrated that Pa Bumpstead counts for as little around his own home as the family cat.

Ma and the older girls leave for the movies, while Pa prepares for his nightly tasks of washing the dishes and cleaning the house. In the meantime Billy Clark slips in and he and Elaine begin planning an elopement.

Then enters Sam Green, a neighbor. Sam is an entirely different sort of fellow from his crony, Pa. Where Pa is a family drudge, Sam is king of his home. He tries to rouse his old friend to cut loose from the feminine apron strings, but without avail until Pa is persuaded to drink a little hard cider. He takes a second drink. Another. And another.

Quickly the cider does its work, awakening in Pa the long dormant manly independence he ought to have. In fact, he becomes so reckless he even goes out alone to his lodge meeting.

That is the start of the play. Maintaining its sympathetic humanness and delicious humor throughout, it moves with accelerating pace to a surprising and delightful wind-up.

All the players have parts particularly well adapted to their individual gifts this week and it is expected that the memory Atlanta will carry of them through the summer will be one of the happiest of the entire season of delightful productions they have given the city this spring.

Band, Color, Song Epic, at Capitol 'King of Jazz' With Whiteman

The greatest revue picture yet made, "The King of Jazz," starring Paul Whiteman and his band, will be the offering at Loew's Capital theater this week. So tremendous is the entertainment value in this feature that the management has decided to omit the usual vaudeville program for the week.

Made entirely in gorgeous technicolor, so perfect that the coloring is actually restful to the eye, with one tremendous song production following another, with comedy sketches, dance spectacles and orchestra numbers tumbling from the screen in a kaleidescope of scintillant amazement, "The King of Jazz," beyond question, surpasses every other attempt of its type by many miles.

It was directed by John Murray Anderson, famous revue producer of the Broadway stage. Mr. Anderson has demonstrated in this picture that Broadway's best is better than anything Hollywood can offer, at least for a picture of this kind.

Many famous singers and players appear in the picture in addition to Paul Whiteman and his internationally beloved band.

John Boles, possessor of one of the finest tenor voices on the screen, sings several new songs, including "It Happened in Monterey," "Song of the Dawn," and others.

Jeannette Loff, who won tremendous praise for her work in "Vagabond King," is another leading performer, while scores of soloists, and thousands of dancers and show girls parade through the glittering sequences of the production.

Mr. Anderson has incorporated into his picture many ideas entirely new. The sequences, many of them are nothing less than pageants of sparkling color and movement. They dazzle and awe every beholder.

Among the orchestra numbers that are outstanding smash hits of the picture are "A Beach in the Park," "The Melting Pot of Song," and Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue."

The picture is epochal in that it introduces something entirely new to the audible screen. It is a production that will be remembered for years and will take its place with "Birth of a Nation" and a few others which the history of the picture industry now list as pictures that revolutionized production ideas.

Handcuff Marvel Shows at Rialto

Demonstrating the latest and finest types of man-holding cuffs and shackles, as well as the cruelest strait-jackets and a European invention known as a "German torture belt," a "Mystery Man" will appear nightly next week on the stage at the Rialto theater. This unknown marvel will extricate himself, in full view of the audience, from any shackles, gyves, strait-jackets, ropes or other means of restraint the audience desires. His equipment will be inspected by representatives of the local police department.

This is an added attraction to the sensational talking picture expose of high school life today, called "The Rampant Age," which will be the feature screen attraction at the Rialto this week.

Both the screen feature and the "Mystery Man" will appear at a midnight show Sunday and thereafter the "Mystery Man" will appear each night at 8 o'clock.

Each night, also, the anonymous performer will tell what sections of the city he plans to visit the following day and daily, as he goes his way about the streets, he will present a pair of tickets to the theater to the persons who touch him on the shoulder and accost him with "You are the Mystery Man of the Rialto theater."

Expose of High School Youth Rialto Feature

"The Rampant Age" Made From Famous Novel by 18-Year-Old Boy.

Just what is the truth about the wild parties, necking, drinking and general recklessness of the modern youth, of both sexes, of high school age?

The answer to that question will be told this week, beginning with a midnight show tonight, on the screen at the Rialto theater, through the medium of a startling talking picture made from a book written by a high school boy. The picture and book are titled "The Rampant Age," and the author is Robert S. Carr, of Massachusetts, whose novel has proven a sensation since it was first published a year or so ago.

With James Murray and Merna Kennedy playing the leading roles, the picture is even better than the book. It tells in fast moving action and thrilling drama the doings of a group of high school boys and girls from the wealthy homes on Long Island. Hilarious affairs in palatial homes, secret meetings in the quiet nooks between boys and girls, wild automobile rides and, at the climax, a thrilling leap from plane to plane in midair, form the breath-taking events in this picture.

It tells the story of a quiet, reserved girl who, to save the boy she loves from the clutches of a schoolgirl "vamp," sets out to be as wild as the wildest herself. The scrapes she gets into, the drunken orgies and the breathtaking defiance of society's rules, create one of the most startling pictures of recent release.

In addition to "The Rampant Age," the Rialto will present a "Mystery Man," one of the cleverest of all handcuff and strait-jacket kings, who will appear at the midnight show on Sunday and every night during the week at 8:00. There will also be a news reel and short comedy subjects.

Belle Bennett is coming to the screen as a Vitaphone star in "Courage." She's the mother of several children in the new talkie.

"The Big Pond," With Chevalier, Georgia Feature

Famous French Comedian Has Ideal Role in Newest Vehicle.

"The Big Pond," Maurice Chevalier's newest starring vehicle of the talking and singing screen, will be the feature attraction at Keith's Georgia theater this week. With an appeal that delights the average movie patron as thoroughly as he does the more sophisticated, it is doubtful if there is a screen star today with a larger and more enthusiastic following than Chevalier.

The feature picture will be included in a program of usual Georgia distinction, including a better-than-usual offering of Radio-Keith-Orpheum vaudeville headlined by Eddie Prado, known as the smartest song comedian of Broadway.

In "The Big Pond" Chevalier found a vehicle better suited to his unique personality than anything he has done before. He portrays the war-impoverished son of a honorable French family who, to support himself, is working as a paid guide to tourists in his native Paris. As such he meets and falls in love with the lovely daughter (played by Claudette Colbert) of a wealthy American manufacturer of chewing gum. To discourage the unwelcome suitor the American father offers him a job back in America, in the gum factory. The young Frenchman accepted and finds he has been given the hardest and most disagreeable work in the plant.

He sticks to it, however, and by his hard work and unfailing cheerfulness finally wins to the highest position in the factory and, of course, also wins the girl as a bride.

Chevalier is at his best in this picture and he finds a wonderful foil for his particular type of acting in Claudette Colbert, his leading lady, who so recently starred in "Young Man of Manhattan." The gay Frenchman sings a number of new songs which will inevitably become popular song hits of the day, notably "Living in the Sunlight, Loving in the Moonlight," and "You Brought a New Kind of Love to Me."

The supporting cast contains many splendid stage performers, including George Barbier, Marion Ballou, Andree Corday, Frank Lyon, Nat Pendleton and Elaine Koch. The director is Hobart Henley, who also directed the recent successes, "The Lady Lies" and "Roadhouse Nights."

Important If True.

"The Measure of a Man," 7 reels.

Alice White is "Man Crazy"—in her next picture.

"Moonshine Valley" lies between "Hills of Kentucky."

The advertising managers wonder, I am told, if it is right for them to guide their readers to such an entertainment as "Strictly Dishonorable." The feverish curiosity of the heroine of that comedy is held by many good people to be indecent, a deleterious example to those who are easily led astray. "Young Sinners" has been pointed out as a brazen parade of youthful depravities, the manuscript of which could not be printed in any virtuous newspaper. No little howl has been raised over the transgressive nature of "Lost Sheep," which pictures innocence in a brothel atmosphere. All of these plays enjoy the freedom of the advertising columns and have the indirect recommendation of the journals that publish them. Are they fit, the editors ponder, to be announced alongside merchandise about which there is no question; or should they be ostracized? The rough musical revues make no trouble, since obscenity is regarded as not so detrimental as sin.

Strangest Film Ever Produced Comes to Fox

"Ingagi" Is Picture of Hunting in Africa, Featuring Gorillas.

Do gorillas and native savage African women consort?

That is a question that has puzzled scientists and explorers. It may be partly answered when "Ingagi," the most sensational film ever produced, is shown at the Fox theater for six days, beginning Monday.

Sir Hubert Winstead, fellow of the Anthropological Society, noted scientist and big game hunter, who inspired the filming of "Ingagi," in an interview answers the perplexing question about the half-man, half-ape creatures that are found in the jungles, as follows:

"I had heard a lot from several old-timers about the so-called half-breeds, that is half-ape, half-human creatures to be found somewhere in the heart of Gorilla land, so I planned an expedition to find out for myself.

"We found a colony of natives, very low breed, really. They had a custom, I learned, of giving one of their women to the gorillas each year to prevent being attacked by the big simians, who have their stamping ground near the native village, and take their toll as payment for keeping hands off. The woman is socially ostracized once she is selected with due ceremony and left to wait for the coming of the gorilla who takes her away.

"What becomes of her? They won't tell, the native beggars. So we determined to find out. We caught a gorilla, a big chap he was, too. And then we caught a child—well, I am willing to believe it is a half-breed. It looked as much like a monkey as it did a native infant. And it merely chattered and acted like a simian. Then we saw a woman. She may have been a half-breed herself, or one of the outcasts—but she was with a gorilla and was suckling a babe, apparently contented."

The mating of gorillas with the savage women is just one of the many mysteries that are involved in "Ingagi." There are actual fights with dangerous wild animals, in one of which one of the cameramen was killed. This scene is shown on the screen. "Ingagi" will set a precedent for exciting, thrilling and amazing motion picture entertainment and tremendous crowds are expected to greet its presentation at the Fox during the coming week. In every-one of the "key" cities in the country where it has, and is, being shown, all local attendance records have been broken and it has been found necessary to hold it over for several weeks longer than had been originally planned.

Georgia Vodevil Topped by Pardo

What promises to be the best vaudeville program in months is billed for Keith's Georgia theater this week, with Eddie Pardo, smartest singing comedian on Broadway, occupying the headline position.

The stage show will be given in connection with the feature screen presentation of "The Big Pond," newest and best starring vehicle for Maurice Chevalier, the tremendously popular performer from Paris. Claudette Colbert, brunette beauty of "Young Man of Manhattan" fame, plays opposite Chevalier.

There will be an added stage attraction this week in a bathing girl style revue, with a dozen of Atlanta's most charming girls acting as models for the latest styles in Bradley bathing suits.

Eddie Pardo offers a vaudeville act of unique type, with the singing and dancing enlivened by an original brand of really funny patter. He is aided in the act by two capable and lovely—both feminine—partners. All three are provided with splendid opportunities for use of their unusual gifts as performers.

Franklyn D'Amore, with Jack Lane and Ethel Truesdale, offer one of vaudeville's most surprising acts. This turn opens with all the earmarks of an equilibrist feature. Just as it is well started, however, it turns into a singing act and finally concludes as a smart and snappy dancing turn.

Perhaps the biggest conversation creator on the bill will be Marc Nathal, the "Man Monkey." So perfect is Nathal's impersonation of a giant ape that he frequently fooled his audiences into believing it was the real animal they were seeing. He does not confine his act to the stage, but runs around the aisles, leaps from seat back to seat back and performs all around the balcony rail.

Everett Sanderson, former Oklahoma cowboy and today undoubtedly the most versatile performer in vaudeville, will complete the bill. He will be assisted by Nanone Nadon and Ellis Thornbrooke in an act described as musical character interpretations of his own song compositions. Sanderson plays a dozen musical instruments, portrays half a dozen characters, sings, dances, whistles, spins a rope and juggles. And does them all with the skill and aplomb of an expert.

Local Stages Alluring for the Week

You can't go wrong in selecting your amusements from Atlanta stage offerings this week. Above, at upper left, is a young lady named Maxine Hamilton, who is one of the featured performers in another hit success from the Fanchon and Marco "idea" factory. "Black and Gold" is the title of the offering for the Fox stage for the week. The handsome youth in the light felt hat at upper right is none other than Eddie Pardo, said to be the smartest singing comedian on Broadway. Eddie will headline the Radio-Keith-Orpheum vaudeville program at the Georgia. The two cuties below don't rightfully belong in a group of stage attractions, for they will be heard merely on the talking and singing screen. However, the picture they adorn is "King of Jazz," at Loew's Capitol and, inasmuch as that theater is not running a stage show this week—the reason being that "King of Jazz" is so filled with glorious revue and vaudeville features that an added stage performance would make the show entirely too one-sided—the two pulchritudinous misses are included just to add to the attractiveness of the layout.

The newest fad in the Times Square sector is the gypsy tea room where patrons may have their fortunes told at no extra charge, by the peacock-robed prognosticators. A number of these tea rooms have opened, serving merely tea, cake or sandwiches. Last week several arrests of proprietors were made for the violation of an old statute, which prohibits fortune telling, but in each case the court dismissed the defendant upon the ground that no fee was exacted.

'Gold-Diggers of Broadway' Opens Buckhead Theater

Heading the brilliant inaugural program which will mark the opening of the handsome new Buckhead theater is "Gold Diggers of Broadway," the Warner Bros.-Vitaphone all-color, singing, dancing, talking and musical hit featuring Nick Lucas, Conway Tearle, Nancy Welford, Ann Pennington, Winnie Lightner and William Bakewell.

Among the popular numbers which Nick Lucas sings in the picture are "Painting the Clouds With Sunshine" and "Tiptoe Through the Tulips With Me," and several others. Known as "The Crooning Troubadour," Lucas closed a headline engagement in Atlanta only a week ago and before leaving the city he made two radio broadcasts, dedicating one of his favorite songs to the Buckhead theater.

An added attraction on the theater's inaugural program is "Fatal Forceps," a riotously funny talking comedy starring Ford Sterling. The news weekly chosen for the Buckhead theater is Universal Sound News.

Promptly at 1:30 tomorrow afternoon the Buckhead theater will open its doors to the public, giving that community its first theater and providing Greater Atlanta with a splendid new enterprise that has the distinction of being the second theater in Atlanta constructed especially for sound.

This theater represents an investment of $250,000 and makes a worthy addition to Atlanta's already notable list of picture theaters. With a seating capacity of more than 1,000, beautifully designed and appointment, perfectly equipped, ideally located, the Buckhead theater takes its place as a new and splendid civic center.

"The One Woman Idea" never traveled far beyond Eden.

Nancy Carroll Stars in "Honey" For Cameo Fans

Nancy Carroll is to be seen and heard in her second musical romance and her second starring picture, "Honey," which returns to the Cameo the first half of this week. The cuddlesome Miss Carroll plays the role of a southern girl who is forced by circumstances to assume an Irish brogue and play the role of cook in her own plantation kitchen. Stanley Smith plays the role of Burton Crane, young scion of wealth, who falls in love with Nancy during a visit to her plantation. Smith was Nancy's college boy sweetheart in "Sweetie." In addition to Smith others in the big supporting cast are Harry Green, Zasu Pitts, Lillian Roth, Skeets Gallagher, Mitzi Green and Charles Sellon.

An absorbing drama of life in an English trading post in West Africa opens at the Cameo Thursday when "Vengeance" hits the screen with Jack Holt, Dorothy Revier and Phillip Strange in the leading roles. The story is well knit together. Holt, the man who has for several years been in charge of the trading post, has asked the London office for relief. In answer to this request Phillip Strange is sent out. He arrives with his young and charming wife. He is censured for his poor judgment in bringing her to such an un-Godly place. An intense antagonism develops between Holt and Strange because of Strange's poor judgment in handling the natives. Strange's wife breaks under the strain of her husband's cruelty and the ravages of the tropical climate. She appeals to Holt. They fall in love. The complications that result from this situation complete the action of a most absorbing story of the tropics.

Six Great Hits Of Vocal Screen Come to Alamo

Six of the outstanding talking and singing hits of the audible screen are booked for the Alamo No. 2, popular Whitehall street theater, during the coming week.

With a splendid equipment for sound pictures, this convenient theater, with a change of program every day in the week, attracts large crowds who enjoy the carefully selected features offered for their entertainment.

The program this week contains some of the most successful productions to come from the Hollywood studios in recent months. On Monday "Coquette;" on Tuesday, "Lilies of the Field;" Wednesday, "Half Way to Heaven;" Thursday, "Show Boat;" Friday, "His First Command," and Saturday, "Burning Up."

3 One-Act Plays To Be Presented By Civic Group

An unusual and varied program will be presented by the Civic Group at the White Barn theater, 117 Peachtree street, N. E., on June 2, 3 and 4. It will consist of three one-act plays—"Harbour," by L. Stanley Jast; "Another Way Out," by Walter Langley, and "Dark Hunger," by Herbert Nellis. As a result of the civic theater's remarkable expansion, the work of this organization has become so widely recognized and acclaimed that, by special arrangement, it has secured permission from Mr. Jast, noted British author and playwright, to present "Harbour." This was originally produced by the Unnamed Society, a group of artists and dramatists in England who have done much experimental work in playwrighting and producing along the lines of the Little Theater movement at their famous Deansgate playhouse in Manchester, England. Taking part in the play are Leonard Coker, Herbert Nellis and Gwynn Burrows.

"Another Way Out," the second offering on the program, is a cleverly-written piece, with amusing plot and sparkling dialogue. Under the masterly direction of Gwynn Burrows, the daring situations of the play are presented with skill by a talented cast, including Miss Carmen Mather, Gilbert Maxwell, Betty Burdette, Miss Helen Smith and Arthur Hardy.

Owing to the marked success accorded "Bitter Bread," The Civic Theater Group has selected for production another play, "Dark Hunger," by that young Atlanta playwright, Herbert Nellis. This is the second work by the local author to be presented to Atlanta audiences. The Civic Players have taken special interest in it, as the organization recognizes in Mr. Nellis a genuine talent for playwrighting, and claims him as its first discovery in this particular phase. Mr. Nellis has been connected with the Civic Theater since its inception over a year ago. In "Dark Hunger" he has achieved a splendid work, depicting the tragedy of a woman who dwells in a world of her own dreaming only to awake to stark reality she cannot face. The situations are artistically handled; the dialogue is highly poetic in idea but written naturally and spontaneously in accordance with the play's theme. A brilliant cast has been selected by Eugene Jones to interpret the roles, including Miss Mary Elizabeth Pinkston, Hayward Granade, John Winchester and Miss Dorothy White.

Tense Sea Drama and "Girl Said No" At Loew's Grand

"The Ship From Shanghai," a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, classed as one of the most dramatic tales of the sea to be pictured by the sinema, and "The Girl Said No," featuring the incomparable William Haines in one of his funnier efforts, are the attractions at Loew's Grand theater for the ensuing week.

Louis Welheim, the character actor, who has won the acclaim of theatergoers throughout the land for his splendid acting in countless roles, is cast as Ted, a strange, discontented seaman. Wherever the film has shown, Wolheims has grabbed off most of the honors. Conrad Nagel and Kay Johnson have the leads.

The play deals with the fate of a party of rich young society people abandoned in the middle of the Pacific ocean on a schooner with the half-crazed seaman, Ted, leading a mutiny. A whirlwind dramatic finish brings the picture to a close with an exceptionally surprising climax. "The Ship From Shanghai" plays the first three days of the week at the Grand.

For joy unconfined and laughs at the rate of one a minute for several hours, there has never been a picture like "The Girl Said No." William Haines, one of the screen's most impressive young comedians, gets off the best comedy of his career.

It is a tale of the young college graduate, fresh from the ivy-covered halls of his alma mater, who attempts to buck the world of big business and incidentally win the love of an adorable young girl. Every minute of the picture's duration is packed with punch, and Haines, assisted by such an excellent cast as Marie Dressler, Polly Moran, Leila Hyams, scores a smashing comedy hit.

Now that it is known that the advertising departments are casting a detestive eye on the Brodway theaters it will be easier for playgoers to be cleanly in their playgoing. If a drama is permitted to advertise, you may consider it safe to attend; if not, you are warned to stay away. The theater ads will be as dependable as those of stocks and bonds, printed only after a strict investigation. In time, perhaps, vigilance will be still further extended. I can imagine future days when Mr. Winchell, of "The Mirror"; Mr. Atkinson, of "The Times"; Mr. Garland, of "The Telegram"; Mr. Littell, of "The World," and Mr. Gabriel, of "The American," returning from a play, will report at once to their boards of censorship. "Is it art?" they will be asked. "No!" will be the answer. "Then," the order will follow, "throw out the ads."

Neighborhood Theaters

West End Has Hit In "Sunny Side Up"

The West End theater offers on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, "Sunny Side Up," featuring Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell. This all-talking, all-dancing and all-singing Fox Movietone is hailed as the greatest musical comedy hit of the year. Farrell reveals a pleasing baritone voice in several song numbers. Miss Gaynor in addition to her sweetness and daintiness, sings and dances in many scenes. An unusually fine supporting cast surrounds the stars in Sharon Lynn, Frank Richardson and El. Brendel.

On Thursday and Friday . . . Lon Chaney in his outstanding dramatic success, "The Phantom of the Opera" . . . now with music, sound and dialogue, is the attraction.

Saturday brings the Night Parade," with Hugh Trevor and Dorothy Gulliver. This is a story concerning a young boxing champion and a plot which threatens his honor and standing.

DeKalb Week Opens With 'The Rogue Song'

Tibbett, with a new personality and a voice that rings around the world comes to capture picture audiences as he has captured the charmed circle of the Metropolitan Diamond Horshoe Arena. It has been acclaimed as the greatest miracle of the talking screen.

Wednesday, Erich Von Stroheim will be featured in the famous talking picture, "The Great Gabbo." Thursday and Friday, Lon Chaney will be starred in a new version of the old thriller, "The Phantom of the Opera." This time the great story will carry a much greater thrill than before as the picture is literally filled with talking singing and dancing sequences.

Saturday, "The Isle of Lost Ships" will close the weeks' offerings. Here's a sea story that will thrill you from start to the closing scenes.

"The Sky Hawk" Open Empire Program

"The Sky Hawk," all-talking Fox movietone, is back on an Atlanta screen this week, when on Monday and Tuesday this epic of the air will be the feature attraction at the Empire theater, corner of Georgia avenue and Crew street. Spectacular scenes of London streets and cafes during the hectic gaiety of wartime and in panic of a Zeppelin raid, are to be seen in this thriller. John Garrick, Helen Chandler, Gilbert Emery, Billy Bevan and other notables are in the cast.

Wednesday's feature will be "4 Devils," a talkie of circus life, with Janet Gaynor, Mary Duncan, Nancy Drexel, Charles Morton and Barry Norton, while Thursday's screen fare will be headed by "Anna Christie," Greta Garbo's first talkie.

Ruth Chatterton will be seen and heard on Friday in "The Laughing Lady."

Friday night, at 8 o'clock, Manager Alpha Fowler stages another "amateur nite" contest, with non-professional entertainers vieing with each other to win the three big prizes offered.

Tom Mix will gallop on the silver screen on Saturday in his western thriller, "The Drifter."

Tenth Street Fans To Enjoy "Rio Rita"

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday the Tenth Street theater presents the most spectacular production that the talking screen has yet offered, Florenz Zeigfeld's "Rio Rita," with an array of stars that rival the heavens. In this magnificent picture you will see beautiful Bebe Daniels as Rita, and for the first time hear the golden voice that has made her famous. John Boles, whose voice and personality have made him the most popular man on the screen, also Robert Woolsey and Bert Wheeler, the funniest of comedians. Gorgeous scenes are shown in natural color.

"Happy Days" is the attraction for Thursday and Friday. The all-star cast includes Will Rogers, Janet Gaynor, Edmund Lowe, Victor MacLaglen, Charles Farrell, El Brendel, and 1,000 other stars.

Saturday brings "The Great Gabbo" with Eric Von Stroheim and Betty Compson, a thrilling story of a ventriloquist.

"Flight" Is Offered At Ponce de Leon

On Monday and Tuesday "Flight," great American epic of the air, starring Jack Holt and Lila Lee, is the feature at the Ponce de Leon. The supreme all-talking drama of the air will give you a special thrill.

Wednesday and Thursday will bring Reginald Denny and Merna Kennedy in an all-talking farce comedy, "Embarrassing Moments." Merna Kennedy has always been a leading lady, since her first picture with Charlie Chaplin, "The Circus."

Friday brings another bill of high-class screen vaudeville to the Ponce de Leon. This week two high-salaried performers share honors on the six-act program. Elsie Janis, who did more for the entertainment of our boys overseas than any other one person, and Frances Alda, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, share the honor positions.

Saturday "Fangs of Wolfheart," a story of the wide-open spaces, starring one of the greatest dogs of all time, Wolfheart, will be the main attraction with the fourth chapter of the serial, "The Green Archer," a close second.

New Theater Opens---Old Favorite Returns

Many Sensations In Fox Stage Bill

What is said to be one of the most remarkable athletic and adagio acts ever shown on a local screen is one of the big features of the Fanchon and Maro Idea, "Black and Gold," to be seen at the Fox beginning Monday, as the stage presentation with the feature, "Ingagi," the sensational Congo picture. This act is composed of the Kemmys, three men, and Miss Eva Ivey, a winsome and supple young girl. The abandon with which the men toss her around is not only said to be breath-taking, but also forms one of the most sensational acts of the kind ever shown. Another distinct feature on the bill is Arnold Grazer, who poses as a gold statue for an interminable length of time during the opening of the act, and then goes into a sensational toe dance, exhibiting remarkable power and agility.

Maxine Hamilton, billed as "a little girl with a high kick," described as a winsome blonde, presents a song and dance feature which is very pleasing, and Lee Wilmot, a "goof," burlesques some of the modern dances, winding up his act with a finale with Miss Hamilton which is termed one of the most laughable ever seen.

The Sunkist Beauties, a bevy of beautiful maidens who form an unusual background for the "Black and Gold" idea, present one of the most beautiful and pleasing ensembles yet seen at the Fox, and the duo-colored costumes, black on one side and gold on the other, are as startling as beautiful.

Enrico Leide and the orchestra present as the overture "Rienzi," by Wagner, one of the most colorful presentations yet heard at the Fox, and the newsreel and suitable short subjects will also be on the week's offering.

Harold Smith, the last name is fictitious, was formerly attached to the "copy" desk of a local newspaper. Today he looks like a banker and the reason for his prosperity is attributed to the thriving business he has established writing addresses in advance for the speakers at Rotary, Kiwanis, Chamber of Commerce and other gatherings. By keeping a watchful eye on the forthcoming jambourees of various business associations and interviewing the presiding officers, Smith invariably garners assignments for the speeches to be delivered by the principals. It is amusing to hear him tell of his presence at an annual banquet of one trade assocation where the audience was regaled with talks by its executive officers, all of which had been prepared by Smith.

PARAMOUNT-PUBLIX HOLDS FIELD MEETING

The first field meeting held in the southeastern division of Paramount-Publix Corporation since the welding together of the production, distribution and exhibition branches of Paramount Pictures, came to an end last night in Atlanta, where for three days field executives and managers from all parts of the southeast were in conference.

Announcement was made Friday of the new program of Paramount pictures to be released during the coming year, southeastern division executives being enthusiastic over the coming product.

Among the new pictures announced are Harold Lloyd in "Feet First;" Moran and Mack in "Anybody's War;" Gary Cooper in "The Spoilers," by Rex Beach; Nancy Carroll and Buddy Rogers in "Follow Thru;" the four Marx brothers in "Animal Crackers;" Claudette Colbert in "Manslaughter;" Jackie Coogan in "Huckleberry Finn;" William Powell in "Scarab Murder Case," and Ruth Chatterton in "The Right to Love." Of special interest is the announcement of the screen transition of Cyril Maude, famous English actor, in his most famous role, "Grumpy." Other special features on the horizon are "Monte Carlo;" Maurice Chevalier in "The Little Cafe;" "Fighting Caravans," with Gary Cooper; "Heads Up," with Buddy Rogers; "Morocco;" "The General," with Walter Huston; "The Sea God," featuring Richard Arlen and Fay Wray; "Dancing Mothers;" "Rose of the Rancho" and "Kid Boots," with Jack Oakie in the title role. "Let's Go Native," with Oakie and Jeannette MacDonald, is another Broadway success Paramount is bringing to the screen. Nancy Carroll and Dick Arlen will have the leading roles in "Rodeo Romance;" William Powell also gets his best role in "Ladies' Man," an early release. "With Byrd at the South Pole," the authentic story of the famous exploring admiral's trip south, will be seen on the screen of Paramount Publix theaters early in the fall.

John J. Friedl, southeastern division director of theater operations for Paramount Publix, presided at the three-day meet at which addresses were made by Willard C. Patterson and E. R. Rogers, district managers; J. E. Elder and Tracy Barham, of the New York office, and other executives of the home office field staff.

Among those in attendance were Dave Prince, local distribution manager for Paramount Publix; C. C. Cowles, district booker; N. Edward Beck, district publicity director, and the following theater managers from various points of the southeastern division: Charles Oswald, Walter Clements, W. E. Weiman, R. F. Pinson, A. M. Holtz, O. L. Freeman, Clyde Goodson, Phil Longdon, M. L. Semon, Joe Blank, H. Daransoll, W. W. Caldwell, R. E. Hicks, Robert Cullinane, Howard Morris, Boliver Hyde, V. L. Wadkins, George Hoffman, Monty Salmon, Frank Miller, R. G. Frost, Robert Wilby, E. B. Whitham, Robert Goldsmith and R. L. Harrison.

In keeping with the times a dumb film, eight years old, brags it is "gay and devilish."

'Scandals' Film, Music-Drama, At Metropolitan

A background of musical splendor, a parade of beautiful girls, a story of ambition, sacrifice, sacred and profane love, form the basis on which "Scandals of 1930," a music drama, was built. It will be shown this week at the Metropolitan.

The opening of the picture is in a little tank town where the owners of a small show are broke and stranded, the troupe being given railroad fare from the savings of one of the owners. A girl, loving this man, forms a partnership with him whereby they go into vaudeville. With indifferent success they have quite a time of it, but finally are on the way to success and fame when the boy strikes the idea of a woman who can give him everything he has wanted: fame, money, but demanding from him a price that is hard to pay since it means giving up the girl he loves. She makes him do that; leaving him to go his way—she hers.

They meet again, later, in the same show—a big Broadway extravaganza, which is all shown in "Scandals of 1930" and there take up again the strings of a broken romance.

That is the beginning of the story which carries one to the highest moments of drama; furnishes comedy, beauty, entertainment plus.

Sally O'Neill, Jack Egan, J. Barney Sherry and Carmel Meyers have the leading roles in "Scandals of 1930," which plays the Metropolitan this week.

The Metropolitan offers an added inducement in the way of coupons printed in today's paper which will admit two patrons for the price of one.

Epochal "All Quiet on the Western Front" Comes to Erlanger Theater Monday, June 9

Some featured players and scenes from the tremendous war drama, "All Quiet on the Western Front," which inaugurates the summer policy of sound pictures at the Erlanger theater a week from Monday.

"All Quiet on the Western Front," super production of the vocalized screen, made from the sensational novel by Erich Maria Remarque, will launch a summer season of road show screen offerings at the Erlanger theater Monday, June 9.

This picture—a war picture so different from anything made hitherto that it has been the sensation of every city and country where it has been seen—is described in an editorial in the Los Angeles Record as "more than a talking and sound picture. It is a celluloid document, exposing without exaggeration, all the sufferings, horror and tragedies of war. It is told from the German viewpoint, a most interesting angle because, so far, we have not fully realized their position and feelings in a conflict that shook the world."

Speaking of the work of Lewis Milestone, the director, the same editorial says:

"No doubt Milestone will start many arguments with some of his gestures. He meant to do that. He has dared things never before placed upon the screen."

There are so many features to "All Quiet" that it is impossible to list them all without reasonable bounds. It is a story of men in the most terrible position men ever found themselves—but it is also a story of women in position scarcely less bizarre and outre. It is a story of suffering, yet it is a story of deepest love—the love of life and love itself.

It is brought to the Erlanger as one of the most important achievements of the sound screen. Given an impressive road show presentation it should attract capacity audiences for this, its southern road show premiere.

Incidentally the management announces that the picture will positively not be shown at any other theater in Atlanta this year.

CORONATION MARCH ON STROMBERG HOUR

"Pomp and Circumstance" Among Numbers on Monday Night Program.

"Pomp and Circumstance," the familiar coronation march, and other melodious classics will be presented by the Stromberg-Carlson orchestra, conducted by Paul White, Monday night from 8 to 8:30 o'clock. This program originates at WHAM, Rochester, and is spread over WSB and the WJZ network of the National Broadcasting Company from coast-to-coast.

Paul White, who will act as conductor of the orchestra on Stromberg-Carlson's summer programs, is not only a violinist, but is a writer of music having several compositions to his credit. He was with the Cincinnati symphony, taught at the New England conservatory at Boston, and was with the Eastman Theater orchestra until its dissolution.

The stirring coronation march played on Monday's program was written by the Englishman, Edward Elgar, for the accession of King Edward VII, an achievement for which Edward afterwards knighted him. Other melodious numbers will be the overture to Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro," which contains excerpts of the many jolly and spontaneous airs in this comic opera, and the beautiful concert waltz of Strauss, "Tales from the Vienna Woods."

The complete program follows:

Overture—Marriage of Figaro.....Mozart
Serenade for Strings .....Pierne
Minuet .....Bolzoni
Tales from the Vienna Woods.....Strauss
Pomp and Circumstance.....Elgar

Radio Men Going To Big Convention

During this week the world's largest national radio show and convention will be held at Atlantic City, and will be attended by thousands of radio manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers, from all parts of the United States. A complete showing of everything new in radio will be made, and problems affecting all phases of the industry will be analyzed and discussed. The following radio men from Atlanta have indicated their intention of attending the national radio show and convention:

Joe H. Almand, Sterchi Furniture Company; G. Richard Shafto, Graybar Electric Company; F. H. Bosler, American Electric Lamp Company; Ed F. Yancey, Yancey-Reid Company; R. H. NEWEST RECEIVERS BEING FEATURED

Radio Show Opening Monday Gives First Public View of Changes.

BY C. E. BUTTERFIELD,
Associated Press Radio Editor.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., May 31. (AP)—Improved tone quality, remote control tuning, elaborate cabinets and automobile receivers are some of the highlights which mark the new radio season just beginning.

A peep behind the scenes in the laboratories of the country indicates that these points are to be given important consideration in the displays of new apparatus to be unveiled at the annual trade show and convention of the Radio Manufacturers' Association. The show opens tomorrow and continues through Friday.

Numerous features are planned for this year's exhibition, including the first presentation of home television apparatus at a trade show. This display is to include completed reproducers as well as kits for assembly by the experimentally inclined.

More than 200 exhibitors are expected to occupy 38,000 square feet of floor space in presenting another year's offerings from their laboratories which show that an eight-tube receiver is still considered to be the best for all-around reception. Tone quality has been improved through changes in the design of dynamic speakers and amplifiers.

Most manufacturers will include the screen grid tube in their models, three being the accepted average for the tuning section. In the tube displays, the pentode will have its part, although it is not expected to be a factor in receiver design this year. Some new tubes, hailed as bringing improvement in certain types of sets, also will have a place.

Cabinet design, with the idea of pleasing the eye of the buyer, indicates a trend toward massiveness, with the console far ahead in the race for popularity over the table model receiver. Remote control tuning is also being given wider use. By this method it is possible to operate the receiver from an adjoining room merely by the push of a button. The remote tuner box is fastened to the receiver by a long cable.

Automobile radio sets, intended to add to the pleasures of motorists, have been designed to fit into almost any type of car.

In connection with improved tone quality, designers have paid considerable attention to the tone range. Some model receivers have controls on the panel, making it possible to change the pitch to fit not only the ear of the listener but the acoustic properties of the room where the receiver is located. Automatic volume control is an added feature on many models, with phonograph combinations numerous.

Another interesting display is expected to be that of short wave receivers, which are beginning to attract more attention. Designs similar to table model broadcast receivers are to be shown, both with AC and battery supply.

New Radio Service Opens on Northside

Northside Radio Service Company, a firm specializing exclusively in radio service, has recently been opened at 691 Boulevard, corner of Ponce de Leon avenue, and is one of the most modern equipped shops in the south. The personnel includes V. E. Byrd, technician; J. W. Nasworthy, technician, and W. P. Clements.

BOOK REVIEWS IN TABLOID

Abraham Lincoln Traveled This Way. By Fred L. Holmes. This is not a guide book for the twentieth century American traveler, but the log book of a pilgrim to the Lincoln country. The foreword is by Glenn Frank, president of the University of Wisconsin, who among other things makes the following comment: "I am, I confess, a little suspicious of a new book on Lincoln. It is no easy matter to invade a field as fully plowed as the life of Lincoln has been plowed, yet despite this handicap of one of the devoted Lincolnians, and without pretense of presenting a sober monograph on newly discovered Lincolniana, Mr. Holmes has produced a volume that is at once unique and useful."

The critics say that this is not a biography. This is not a guidebook. This may be true and yet, when the reader starts at Hodgenville, the birthplace shrine of Lincoln, on the Dixie highway, which is as "black and smooth as a satin ribbon," it will lead him to the heart of the Lincoln country, on and on through cities and towns until he stops to rest at Nancy Hanks Lincoln Park, Indiana, a part of which has become Lincoln City, and then on to the trail's end which leads to Illinois, the trail being called "The Lincoln Way" for it is not a national highway but the little road over which the Lincoln family traveled many years ago, he will have the biography of the Great Emancipator at his finger tips, for he will have traveled many miles, a sufficient number to make him a first class guide.

The author of this contribution, who "follows Lincoln from the poverty of his birth to the power of his maturity, covers the three in one, for he has not confined his story to the old beaten path of the biographer, nor the highway of the annual traveler, neither has he searched for the beautiful places like the sight-seeing tourist, but he has given the reader the benefit of his experience during the two years he spent in making a series of pilgrimages to every place memorable by some event in which Lincoln took part. Especially interesting is the winding dirt road in the old eighth circuit, the trackline trail marker bearing the inscription, "Abraham Lincoln Traveled This Way, 1847-1857."

The book also carries a map of the Lincoln country and 32 illustrations made from original pictures. The first chapter title is "A Log Cabin Enshrined," and the last chapter carries the title, "A Never-To-Be-Forgotten Monument," this refers to the memorial at Springfield, Ill.

There have been any number of books, short stories and news stories written on Lincoln, to this can be added this interesting and well written story by Mr. Holmes. (L. C. Page Co., Boston, $4.00.)

LOCKE'S LAST NOVEL.

The Town of Tombarel. By William J. Locke, the creator of "The Beloved Vagabond." This book was published just before the death of Mr. Locke last month. It takes its title from the chief character, Monsieur Alcide Tombarel, Mayor of Creille, a little town in the wine-growing France which sits upon the top of a hill not far from Nice. It was here that Fontenay, the distinguished English painter, in search of his favorite French wines discovers Tombarel, and decides to paint his picture, then becoming so fascinated with the charm of the place he decides to make it his home.

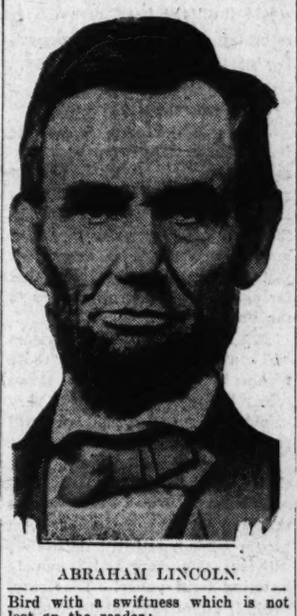

This is the introduction to the surroundings of Monsieur Barel. The author also surrounds him with a group of episodes and experiences characteristic of the man and his country. In doing this Mr. Locke very interestingly tells the life story and the philosophy of the Mayor of Creille. The result is a most appealing picture of Monsieur Tombarel. The splendid work and the striking portraits that Mr. Locke has contributed to fiction will not soon be forgotten. There has always been a charm in the manner in which the author created his heroes, the telling of the story and the attractive selection of the setting.

In writing this story the following comment expresses the approval of his readers: "The manner of telling—the touches of wit and satire, the sly contrasting of Anglo-Saxon with the Provencal outlook of life, the ready sympathy with an appreciation of the unusual, especially the whimsical, in men and events, gives the book its true Lockian flavor."

Mr. Locke was one of the most popular and best beloved of the British novelists. It is estimated that he wrote more than fifty novels and plays, and his readers were not sparing in their praise that he knew how to tell a clever story. (Dodd Mead & Co., New York.)

NEW FICTION.

Song-Bird. By Sophia Cleugh. Today was her fortieth birthday and the beautiful woman who was sometimes called Nightingale, oftener Song-Bird, found herself in a reminiscent mood as she sat in her music room overlooking Central park in the metropolis of the north. Once upon a time she was Nina Hanana, young and ignorant, giving no thought to the future, or the result of her love for the son of a noble Spanish family, she did not realize to what extent his mother would go in her hatred of the lowly born girl who was destined to be a great opera singer, or that she would try to ruin her personal life. She could not believe that the man she loved would add to her unhappiness, or that through the irony of fate that his mother would finally be in her power? This is the story of which she was dreaming today. The author tells the story of the beautiful Songbird with a swiftness which is not lost on the reader:

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

"Daughters of Time, the hypocritic Days,
Muffled and dumb like barefoot dervishes,
And marching single in an endless file,
Bring diadems and faggots in their hands.
To each they offer gifts after his will—
Bread, kingdoms, stars, and sky that holds them all."—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Night Nurse. A Revelation. By Dora Macy. Two millionaire children dying of malnutrition and neglect. A self-centered frivolous mother who is developing into an alcoholic, etc. This is a true story as told by one woman who had selected the profession of a night nurse. Her love and sympathy for the neglected children caused her many times to disregard ethics and disobey the physician's orders. Her career is ended for this reason, and she now tells her story through the author whose nurse she was once or twice. (Brentano's, New York.)

Taking Chances. By M. J. Farrell. First, regardless of the dignity of two initials, the author of this bright, breezy and clever story, is a young woman who possesses both good looks and charm. Miss Farrell's introduction in the first paragraph of her story is quite explanatory: "Since James I granted lands in Ireland to a soldiering Sorrier there have been Sorriers at Sorristown." There have been 11 generations of Sorriers who have been regular sports, and tradition says that the Sorrier men were handsome and the women charming. The last generation was a brother and sister, Roguey, a landed proprietor, and Maeve, a beautiful girl, reckless, happy, and a regular sport. The author writes most interestingly of the hunting and riding in those days, and even more thrilling was the love story of Maeve and Rowley, for the announcement had been published in the Irish Times that a marriage had been arranged between Major Rowland, of Castle Fountain, and Maeve, daughter of the late Sir Ralph Sorrier, of Sorristown. Then, Mary, with her very morose little terrier, by name, "Mrs. Squiffy," came to Ireland to visit Maeve, and the troubles begin in which each one of the family has his or her share of unhappiness, and even Mary, who loves one man and marries another, reaps her share.

Miss Farrell writes entertainingly of the country house life in Ireland, with its shooting, hunting and lovemaking. Hugh Walpole says: "It is the most engaging novel of the season." (J. B. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia.)

Ninety-Six. By Elliott Crayton McCants. A romance of South Carolina during the Revolution. The title of this historical romance is not unfamiliar to South Carolinians, for it takes its name from an old frontier post of Revolutionary times, the memory of which will ever remain with the natives of this state. The author in writing of the time of his story tells the reader, by way of explanation, that it was in "the closing days of the Revolution—dark months indeed to the sturdy patriots. The vainglorious Cornwallis is charged by Sir Henry Clinton with the task of stamping out the rebellion in the Carolinas." This is followed by the description of the Battle of King's Mountain, in which Tennessee, Virginia, North and South Carolina played a part. And the story goes on, and romance begins in the fast and furious love affair of a young British officer and a South Carolina girl, this with the goings and comings of the country people, the hardships of the patriots, and the incidents and experiences of that time is all told with an interest that will be appreciated. Mr. McCants is a South Carolinian, the name being one of the oldest and best, and in this he proves to be a historian who knows the story of his state. (Thomas Y. Crowell Company, New York.)

FRIENDLY HOUR.

A book of unusual interest which has just been published is "Friendly Chats of the Friendly Hour."

The book contains chats or talks broadcast during the last summer by Dr. J. Stanley Durkee, pastor of the Plymouth church of Brooklyn, N. Y., and author of "In the Footsteps of a Friend," "In the Meadows of Memory," and "God Translated."

The chats were broadcast under the auspices of the National Broadcasting Company and sponsored by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, conducted by the Greater New York Federation of Churches.

In speaking of his summer experiences Dr. Durkee has the following to say:

"I have come to more deeply understand and appreciate this great, common, human heart; I see more clearly its needs and understand more fully how to meet these needs. I have gained the shepherd heart; I speak, through Christ, to serve and save."

The many thousands of listeners of Dr. Durkee's chats will be glad to know that he has allowed same to be put in book form. Published by The Harrison Company, Atlanta.

AMERICAN AIRPORT DESIGNS.

The Lehigh Portland Cement Company has had published by Taylor Rogers & Bliss Inc., of New York, quite an attractive magazine containing 44 prize winning and other drawings from the Lehigh airports competition—the First National Contest for Designs of Modern Airports Held in the United States. With analysis of designs by Archibald Black. The introduction is by Clarence M. Young, assistant secretary of commerce for aeronautics.

My Life With Animals. By George F. Morse. Former director Boston Zoological Park and Aquarium. The story of a man who spent his life in association and care of animals. When he was a boy he loved animals and tramped all through New England woods in an effort to capture a baby fox, this was the beginning of a story that has no dull moments. It is an intelligent and interesting story and will show the reader how strong is the love of man for animals, of their understanding, and of the human sympathy that exists between them. The illustrations and sketches are by Don Nelson. Thomas S. Rockwell Company, Chicago.

The Commonwealth—Its foundations and pillars. By Dr. Charles Henry Brent, late bishop of Western New York. This is a study of human relationships between man and man—the final message of a true Christian and scholar. D. Appleton & Company, New York.

The Psychologist Keeps House. By Edwina Abbott Cowan and Laura Thornborough. The president of Yale University wrote to the authors of this little book, "You have shown great ingenuity in bringing modern psychological principles, plus commonsense, to bear on the problems of the contemporary home." The authors are students of psychology and are well known in their territory. (The Midwest Company, Minneapolis.)

HOME.

God made the home
Man may mar the home.
The home abused dooms the nation; reverently used, the home saves the nation.
Responsibility for the home can be shunned by no one.
Home perverted, man destroyed; home redeemed, man restored.
Everyone should strive to fill our land with good homes.
Churches flourish and all good institutions prosper when the Christian home prevails among men.
As Jesus is the model for every life, so let the home of Jesus be the model for every home.—Rev. Elam F. Dempsey, Oxford, Ga.

POETRY, PROSE AND DRAMA.

Eel Rack. An Epic Narrative of the Delaware. By Frank Pelton. This collection of poems has been widely read and they seem to have been an inspiration to many people, especially "The River" and "Eel Rack." In writing to the author, Zane Grey says, "I have always thought the country about which you write your poem was a great background for a story, not only historically but for its wonderful natural beauty, and evidently you have caught the spirit." Even Dr. Parkes Cadman writes, "It must be a

FIGHTING THE FARM BOARD.

There is a hot conflict on between the federal farm board and the middlemen who have built up the enormous business of handling and marketing farm products upon a commission basis. The farm board, following the purposes of its creation, is seeking to organize the farmers into co-operative marketing organizations by financing their operations for a simpler and more profitable contact with the ultimate consumers.

The commission men see in that function of the farm board a strong invasion of their pre-empted territory and a heavy cut in their incomes—even the wiping out of many of their special sources of profit. They are preparing to attack the board from every possible angle and end its existence if possible. It is a desperate battle against an economic evolution and may easily become a losing one.

To show how the middleman system is working to absorb returns that should more fully come to the producer it is only necessary to cite the case of how the consumer's dollar spent for bread is distributed. Some interesting figures have just been compiled showing that the producer gets 28.1 cents of the dollar. Transportation of the wheat represents 2.6 cents. The elevator margin is 2.8 cents. The flour manufacturer gets 6 cents. The transportation of the flour represents 4.4 cents. The bread manufacturer gets 12.3 cents. The selling cost is 16.4 cents, the "overhead" chargeable to manufacturing is 8.5 cents and the profit accruing to those engaged in manufacture of bread is 5.7 cents. The operating cost to the retailer is 15.7 cents and the profit margin to the retailer is 2.9 cents.

Figuring on that showing one cannot wonder that the farmers have been kicking against the system that sweats his produce so heavily on its way to the hands of the consuming people. Nor can one wonder that at last congress has awakened to the unnecessary tolls thus taken and have devised and financed the federal farm board to find ways and means to take back to the farmers more than 28.1 cents of every dollar the people pay for bread made from a farmer's wheat. It is a people's battle and must be won for them.

WOMEN TO THE FORE.

Because the women of the country spend at least 80 per cent of the family income, and the tariff raises of the cost of living are sure to figure foremost in the coming campaign, the politicians are becoming strongly interested in the temper of the women voters. It is already figured by astute political actuaries that those voters in many states will determine the fate of the parties.

Since there appears to be a general sentiment that the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill is a monstrous imposition upon the consumers of the country, and especially is unjust and disappointing to those engaged in agriculture, any common turning of the women and farmers against it and its perpetrators will lead to a democratic control of the next house of representatives.

That alone would not mean an immediate reconstruction of the tariff rates, but it would help tremendously to bring in by the 1932 elections a full democratic administration. With a democratic congress and president elected, as Cleveland once was, upon the tariff issue, the country would confidently look for a readjustment of tariff rates upon an equitable basis.

The first consideration in making a tariff now is not that of collecting revenue at the customs houses for the support of the national government. Now we have other and larger sources of internal revenue by which the government could be financed without any customs collections. But protection to American industries and labor demand barriers against cheap and aggressive foreign competition. That protection, however, can be adequately provided without penalizing the great mass of the consuming people with a scheme of taxation which tithes them heavily to swell the profits of those who need no such subsidies.

OUR WORLD CHAMPION.

The victory of Bobby Jones yesterday, which gained him the British amateur golf title, establishes the brilliant young Atlantan as the champion of world golfdom. He has fulfilled his cup of joy by annexing the four major championships—the American open and amateur and the British open and amateur titles.

These unprecedented performances have fixed his fame in the popular international sport and sets a mark for all after-comers on the links to shoot at, with faint hopes of becoming his peer.

By his charming character, his high spirit of sportsmanship, and his unrivaled victories, Bobby Jones has become one of the most popular and fame-spreading assets of Atlanta. His return in full triumph will be welcomed in a fashion that would thrill the heart of a Caesar returning from a world conquest. For all Atlanta loves "Our Bobby."

LET'S LOOK ON BOTH SIDES.

Among the visiting journalists from Europe were heard two commonly expressed hopes—one that we would not impose prohibitive tariff rates upon the products of their countries for which they seek markets in America and the other that we would amplify the quotas for emigrants from their nations to the United States.

Putting ourselves in their places we can readily understand those wishes; but if they would put themselves in our place probably they would better understand our tariff problem and our immigration policy.

Before they shall have finished their American studies and leave our shores they may catch the fact that a great majority of our own people are not satisfied themselves with an extravagant and monopoly fostering tariff policy. They may, if wisely attentive to what they hear while traversing the United States, learn that the assumption by the republican party that the phenomenal majority it gained in 1928 was a warrant for Chinese-walling the nation for the benefit of the great and pampered factoring industries is a huge mistake.

In November the cables may carry to them in their distant newspaper offices the fact that the American people will have signally rebuked the Hawleys and Smoots and mandated a just reformation of the tariff to a fair and square competitive basis. That is the democratic doctrine, affording just protection to our industries by rates that will equalize costs of production and giving to skill and values their advantages in our markets.

On the immigration subject the Europeans must learn that in this country we have a labor problem and power that cannot be ignored or defied; that we have more people in the United States now than we can profitably employ gainfully, and that it would be an almost criminal policy to increase their number by free open doors to the millions of Europe whom we know to be eager to come among us.

There are two sides to every shield and our visitors should not refuse altogether to look upon both sides of every shield that interests them.

GRAY HEROES MEET AGAIN.

Beginning on Tuesday at Biloxi in Mississippi, near to "Beauvoir," the last home of President Jefferson Davis, the remnants of the veterans of the Confederate States will gather in their annual reunion. As the average age of the veterans is now 85 years and they are "passing over the river to rest under the shade of the trees" on the eternal shore with Lee and Jackson, this may be the last formal southwide reunion the aged heroes can hold.

Nowhere on earth can there be witnessed a more heart-thrilling and pathetic spectacle than one of these reunions of the old gray veterans. They are the only "veterans of defeat" who ever hold such reunions. One never reads of French veterans, or English veterans, or German veterans annually for over sixty years celebrating the cause and the battles in which they "lost all save honor."

But these old graybacks have never felt a blush of shame for their endeavor to establish a Southern Confederacy and plant it among the enduring nations of the earth. They have never felt a qualm of conscience over the righteousness of the principles for which they fought the most brilliant battles of all time, for those principles still live in American souls. They have never consented that they lost their cause on equal terms of contest.

To hear them boast of their service, and glory over their victories hither and yonder on the far-flung battle line, and in tear-provoking falsetto voices from failing throats again raise the "rebel yell" is to get a thrill in your spirit that soon will be impossible to repeat.

All the south will send its hearts this week to Biloxi to greet again and cheer once more the thin battalion of the palladins who followed cheering wherever Lee, and Jackson, and Johnston and Gordon led them.

CONSTITUTION REFORM.

The reported prevalence of a sentiment among members of the Georgia Bar Association in favor of the holding of a convention to revise and modernize the practically effete constitution of the state is encouraging. It ought to be plain now, from the experiences of the present genration, that the dead hands of 1877 should be taken off the throats of the people.

It has become painfully apparent to every clear thinker in the state that no substantial governmental reforms can be achieved under the limitations and prohibitions of a constitution framed in an era of different circumstances than those in which we now live. It is no impeachment of the wisdom and patriotism of the constitution-makers of 1877 to say that they could not then envision our era and make an iron-bound charter that would adequately serve our new conditions and needs.

There is no class of men in Georgia who have better opportunities and influence to persuade the people to reform the constitution than the lawyers of the state who are in constant conference with the general citizenship. They have to deal with the intricacies, contradictions and hampers in the present patched-up constitution, and can clearly explain the necessity for a more modern and workable charter.

The constitution gives the general assembly full power to convene a constitutional convention without the cost and agitations of a referendum, leaving it to the people to approve or reject the work of the convention when completed and submitted. That is fair and democratic all the way through.

FEDERAL POLICE CASES.

If congress should enact the bill to define the line between federal felonies and misdemeanors with remission of the trial of the latter to United States court commissioners, subject to final action by the district judge, except where appeal is taken to a jury or a higher court, it will do much to expedite law enforcement and to relieve district court congestion.

The core principle of this measure was first proposed by Senator Harris for the summary disposition of minor prohibition offenses. It has now been amended to embrace misdeameanors against all federal laws, and that is an improvement by expansion of the classes of cases.

Since we have introduced into the federal jurisdiction many sorts of police offenses — prohibition, narcotic, white slave, car thefts and the like—some such form of police court trials has become a necessity. It may lead to the creation of more district court commissioners, but that is much better than the erection of more federal district courts and the creation of a large additional number of federal lifetime judges.

There is in this proposed legislation no taking away of any of the constitutional rights of the citizen. The right of trial by jury is preserved with ample terms of protection. The extraordinary multiplication of petty criminal cases, caused by more diligent efforts to enforce prohibition and suppress the traffic in narcotics has become a burden and hindrance to the district courts. Such cases should be tried promptly in commissioner courts, findings as promptly made and reported to the district judge for approval or amendment. The strong probability is that this new system will very greatly deter offenders and lead to a surer enforcement of the police statutes of the nation.

THOSE WAR AMENDMENTS.

The able editor of the Review of Reviews, Dr. Albert Shaw, referring editorially to the fourteenth and fifteenth constitutional amendments, says:

"Those amendments of more than sixty years ago established principles, although time must still elapse before we attain the conditions that will give them full effect."

It would be highly interesting, perhaps instructive, to have Dr. Shaw tell the country what "the conditions" are that he has in mind and the "full effect" of the post-war amendments that he believes should yet be obtained?

The initial wrong principles established by those amendments cannot be righted. The real purposes of them, not expressed frankly in them, are manifestly incapable of being effectuated while human nature remains subject to instinct, environment and tradition. The makers of those amendments, as history of their time fully reveals, intended to humiliate and penalize the southern people by forcing them into civil, political and social amalgamation with the emancipated negroes in their midst.

He is a gross perverter of history who tries to read into those amendments any higher or nobler motive. But time and law have adjusted interracial relations in the affected region so as to avoid those evil purposes, and now the races in the south have reached a modus vivendi together that is better for both than the "full effect" to which Dr. Shaw evidently refers.

The amendments in question are accepted in the south at their full legal value. The supreme court has construed them long ago and here in the south we are holding with loyalty to those constructions. What more is needed?

MISDIRECTED COMPLAINTS.

Some persons interested in Georgia farming appear to have misunderstood the attitude of Dr. Andrew M. Soule, president of the Georgia College of Agricutlure, toward the farmers of the state. They have read into his publications on farm problems of the state that he is severely critical of the ability of our rural people to do successful and profitable farming.

On the contrary, as we interpret Dr. Soule, he has a very pronounced faith in the capacity of Georgia farmers, in their industry, and in their spirit of devotion to the agricultural production of wealth and comfort. He has knowledge, however, that many of the methods employed by the farmers are nonproductive and it is for the reformation of those methods that he pleads, and not for another personnel upon the farms. He believes the Georgia farmer is as good as any in the country when he adopts the latest and best methods and available aids in his farming.

The Georgia College of Agriculture was founded and is maintained to do for Georgia agriculture precisely what Dr. Soule is endeavoring, and that is to educate more practical farmers and to guide the industry into methods and business practices that will establish it as one of the most inviting and satisfying of all the pursuits of our people.

Anyone who feels hurt because his farming practices are subject to such criticisms as Dr. Soule has pronounced should remember that "the wounds of a friend are faithful." The right policy is to cure the wounds and attain health, and not to abuse the surgeon who is faithful to the patient's welfare.

WHEELS FOR THE HELPLESS.

This Sunday afternoon the DeMolay order of young men will present to the Scottish Rite Hospital for Crippled Children two wheel chairs to add to the comfort and exercise of the disabled little ones. The presentation will be made by W. L. Brady, Jr., one of our most active and esteemed Boy Scouts.

The sentiment of helpfulness in an unselfish and useful form which actuates the young people of the DeMolay order is most creditable to them and worthy of emulation by hundreds of elder persons who are abundantly able to add to the needs of the helpless and make life yet worth living to them.

Scarcely a nobler philanthrophy can be found upon the continent than the Scottish Rite hospital here in Atlanta, the generous product of the high-hearted and sympathetic Masons who are of the strong bone and red blood of our citizenship.

ASSETS FROM ADVERTISING.

There are many short-sighted manufacturers and merchants who under-value advertising as a means of promoting their business prosperity. They have off-hand opinions on the subject and have not investigated or observed closely the methods and consequences of judicious and plentiful publicity for their goods.

An attractive trade-mark liberally and assiduously advertised becomes an asset far more valuable than the plant and stock in trade. Within recent memory when $30,000,000 was paid here in Atlanta for the Coca-Cola business the price included $7,000,000 for the plant and $23,000,000 for the good will. When the late Asa G. Candler bought the business for less than $1,000 he took over the name from Dr. Pemberton and had a local job printer make the familiar Coca-Cola trade-mark so that it could not be counterfeited from the types in any printing office. Now that trade-mark is so well known to the world by persistent advertising that probably $50,000,000 would not buy it from its present holders.

The seven letters of "Sunkist" are valued at $10,000,000, and the word "Uneeda" is worth $1,000,000 a letter. Scores of similar examples could be cited, but they would only emphasize a fact now well understood in trade circles—that everlastingly keeping a trade name before the eyes of the people pays enormous dividends. And that is as true in local business as it is in national advertising and distribution. The advertising experts of the nation have but recently declared that the newspaper is by all odds the stream from which the wise advertiser draws the most goldfish. It is the broadcaster that never sleeps.

That bunged-up tariff bill will need an identification card at the door of the White House.

Senator Johnson defends the big navy admirals, but who will defend the senator when the treaty shooting begins?

LOOKING AND LISTENING

BY SAM W. SMALL

Not Running for the Legislature Because of Holding to a Better Job.

The Georgia Confederate veterans who can venture to make the trip to the annual reunion at Biloxi will go to it with shame-mantled cheeks.

All over the south the action of the legislature last summer in voting an increase of their pensions from $50 per quarter to $30 per month, payable monthly as the United States pays its pensioners, was heralded as an act of deserved justice and unusual generosity by the people of Georgia. The old veterans from other states will be eager to congratulate our veterans upon their good fortune only to be told in trembling tones that there "is no such good fortune." The state authorities have welched on the whole proposition and turned the back of their hands on the needs and sorrows of our old heroes.

* * * *

An Inexplicable Situation.

There may be some occult legal or fiscal obstruction, insurmountable by any administrative tactic, for the failure to pay the veterans and their widows the monthly sums voted to them—but I'll be darned if I can find out what that snag is.

I have hunted closely through the laws, through the excuses of the governor, and through the opinion of the attorney-general, and still I cannot find a valid reason why the money coming into the general fund of the state and from the tobacco taxes cannot be applied to those pensions in full as and when due, as a first charge upon the state treasury.

Maybe I am the sorriest dumbell in all Georgia, but I would give my last ten-dollar bill to get on a platform with either the governor or the attorney-general and thresh this ignoble situation out with either or both of them.

* * * *

Not Their Hearts, But Their Heads.

All of us who know them and sincerely esteem them know that neither Governor Hardman nor Attorney-General Napier is callous to the needs and claims of the old veterans and the widows of dead veterans. Their hearts are in the right place and sincerely sympathetic with the victims of the seeming present impasse in the matter of pensions.

What we who are earnestly concerned believe is that their heads have gone wrong on the subject and that they have permitted some threadbare technicalities to halt them from doing what it would rejoice them to do. But they act upon their own judgments and under the obligations of their oaths of office, with responsibility to the people for what they do. So that the pensioners appear to have nothing they can do but suffer on and die with unrequieted hopes.

* * * *

The Petitions Made to Me.

It was because of my interest in these veterans that many of them and of the Daughters of the Confederacy wished me to become a candidate for the legislature.

Other public persons urged half a dozen general reasons why they thought I could give good service in the general assembly.

But, dear friends, accept my profound gratitude for your preferential feelings for me, and my regret that I cannot yield to the invitations so cordially given to me.

I am free from any desire to mix in the political arena as an active protagonist. I am anxious to give whatever I can command to the service of the people and believe I can do that more unselfishly and efficiently as a private citizen holding a somewhat public relation as a daily newspaper writer.

* * * *

The Journalist In Politics.

It has long been my opinion, gathered from the resolution and example of Henry Grady, that a newspaperman with a real lifetime job should keep out of politics.

The business of putting one's fingers on the public pulse every day, of detecting the heart beats of the people, and of dealing with their problems by expression of opinion and counsel, is even higher business than sitting in a legislature and wrangling over a hundred varieties of wise and fool measures—most of them of no concern to the general public.

The newspaperman should be absolutely free of strings, immune to special interests, unselfish in his service to his public and not accusable of partisan propaganda except on great issues of government.

* * * *

My Preference Is Fixed.

In all circumstances that now exist in the state and in the comfortable position I now occupy in my profession I am out of all personal politics.

I would rather stand on the sidelines and throw pop bottles at the ineffective players in the ring than to go in there with them and have to dodge or stop the pop bottles that others throw in.

In return for the very many urgings of my partial friends I promise to use my talents and opportunities to help form a sane and formidable public opinion upon state affairs that will help to inform the legislation by the next general assembly.

TEXT AND PRETEXT

BY M. ASHBY JONES

The Lobby Hunt.

The senate committee, investigating the business of lobbying in Washington, has undoubtedly rendered a needed service to the nation. The revelations which they have made of the manner in which the pending tariff schedules were constructed would justify their work. The methods of Senator Bingham and Senator Grundy, in introducing the paid officials of large manufacturing organizations into the committees and offices of the senate itself, has already gone far toward revealing to the nation the unscrupulous greediness of many large business concerns, in making their profits at the expense of the welfare of the nation.

This committee has rendered a real service also, in showing the ease with which charlatans can fool the so-called "long-headed businessmen," with their claims of special influence with the government. They have shown not only how easily they may be fooled, but how willing they are to pay for special privileges and advantages gained by underhanded methods. What a pitiable picture of our democracy has been given to the country. The capital seems swarming with secret agents of all sorts of selfish interests, seeking to make congressmen and senators, who have been elected to represent the people, the private representatives of private interests.

"Third Degree."

But Senator Carraway's committee has not been an unmixed good. Its methods have been atrocious. The manner of the committee suggests the "third degree" of the police station, rather than the dignity of the "greatest deliberative body in the world." They deal with every witness which appears before them, as if he were already under indictment on a criminal charge. He is immediately put in the position of having something nefarious which he is trying to conceal. The bulldozing, browbeating manner of cross-examination suggests the police court. This is not simply objectionable, not to say humiliating to the witnesses, but it has its serious psychic effect upon the public, who read the daily accounts of this inquisition. The characters of these men are not generally known to the masses of the people, and when they read the insinuating questions of Senators Carraway, Blaine and others, there is left inevitably in the mind of the public an interrogation as to the honesty of the witness, if not a well-defined suspicion.

This procedure has not even the fairness of a courtroom, where the witness has the protection of the presiding judge, the skilled defense of a lawyer, and the limitations of court "rules of evidence." This committee is a law unto itself. Over and over again one of these senators will ask impertinent and leading questions which have no relevancy whatsoever to the purpose of the investigation. "Senatorial courtesy" seems reserved entirely for the senate chamber.

Right of Petition.

There is, too, another definite danger in this lobbying investigation. It is the danger of the failure to discriminate between legitimate representatives of legitimate interests in Washington, and the illegitimate agents of interests who seek illegitimate advantages. When we remember that fully 99-100s of the questions which come before congress were never even suggested in the campaigns for election, it is readily seen that congressmen do not know what their constituents think, or desire, concerning these questions. The people of the nation have a perfect right, individually, in organized groups, or by appointed representatives, to express their desires in Washington on any given question.

The word "lobbying" has come to have a sinister meaning. For this reason we hesitate to say that it is ever right to "lobby." But that is merely playing with words. There is a perfectly legitimate realm, where the citizen has "the right of petition." That means the right to appeal to any official, or legislative representative, to pursue a given course. Of course, the issue comes down to the question of the manner, and the method, of this appeal. My point is, that the investigation should clearly discriminate as to methods, and not cast a blanket suspicion upon every citizen, or citizens, who seek to present their cause in Washington.

NEW YORK SKYLINES

BY CHARLES ESTCOURT, JR.

(Written Exclusively for The Constitution and North American Newspaper Alliance.)

NEW YORK, May 31.—Community activity of all kinds has gone farther in Westchester county, just outside of this city, with its mingling of millionaires, commuters and native villagers, than in any other section of this metropolitan area and Mrs. Eugene Meyer, chairman of a recreational commission there, is considerably responsible for it. She helped to make the county tree-conscious, so that the splendid woodlands and tree-shaded streets may remain as they are or even improve. At a music festival just ended, which engaged choruses of thousands of men, women and children, she made the opening remarks.

"If the shorter work day is to justify itself," she contends, "Americans must gain profound ideas and interests for their leisure time. If the workingman is going to use his leisure merely to increase his material desires, he had better not have it."

At the same time she sees danger in over-organizing leisure time because she feels that the organization of work time has gone too far. Westchester, with city and county pastimes to choose from in great variety, seeks to give the individual a chance. A progress exposition in June will display the county's historical background, health, transportation, dramatic, welfare and social activities, and a new system of semi-mountain trials will be opened, with log shelters and no automobiles or radio sets within sight or hearing.

When the Children Grow Up.

A New York adult should wish to live long if only out of curiosity, not about what's to be done when there are subways in tiers under all of the avenues, all saturated, but about the way the present generation of children is going to turn out.

Special schools that have thrown all of the old rules overboard are experimenting with the children and now a professional group has taken 150 children in hand with the intention of tracing the cause, prevention and cure of all common diseases.

It's a dentist's idea. On the basis that most human ills are introduced to the body through the mouth, he and his colleagues are making every effort to learn the secret of a healthy mouth, and to remedy any defects at once. A far call, this kind of education, from the old-fashioned stunt of washing out the mouth of a small boy with soap when he said naughty words. White mice and guinea pigs also are being subjected to the experiments.

Sweeney of Forty-Second Street.

The Forty-Second Street Association, which does its best to direct the destiny of the thoroughfare in the way in which the members think it ought to go, is headed by George Sweeney, who at 13 began working in hotels, rose to a scullery boy at $50 a month with meals, and rose some more until now he controls more than a dozen hotels that are more like small cities.

He has been decorated by France, Italy and Belgium for services of international value as head of the International Hotel Alliance. He supplied the culinary crew for the George Washington when that steamship carried Woodrow Wilson to France.

Better elevator and lighting effects are about all that the hotel patron can look forward to at present, so far as he can tell, because hotel conveniences are near their apparent limit. And he remembers when the clerk asked the guest whether he wanted a coal or wood fire in the stove in his room.

Hunter's Busy Season Begins.

Francis T. Hunter, newspaper magnate in the fairly metropolitan and suburban county of Westchester, that land of luxuriant estates and commuters' homes to the north of New York city proper, is a startling exception to the general rule that businessmen slow up a little in the summer.

Any slowing up that he may do in business is made up then in greater attention to tennis. Second ranking player in this country for three years, and on occasion a dangerous opponent to the still mighty Tilden in five-set matches, he is also exceptional in the fact that somehow he has to make up in the office whatever time he takes out for the game. After a stiff match he has been known to hurry back to the office and work until 3 o'clock in the morning.

He heads an organization with thriving dailies in more than a dozen Westchester towns. He also has some supervision of Westchester's ambitious program of sports and pastimes.

"Athletics foster," he says in backing this program, "the competitive spirit tempered with the restraint imposed by recognized rules of conduct. Participation in sports stimulates the desire to excel; promotes willingness to face equal or superior skill with the resolve to deliver the best effort and abide by the outcome—at least until an opportunity for further competition presents itself."

Billboards and Buildings.

The roof of a 19-story building at Thirty-third street and Park avenue is used for display of sample billboard posters. Six boards, exactly like the boards that line so many highways, are available there. Specimen posters are pasted across them and prospective customers stand off a few feet and look. The boards can't be seen from the street.

From this roof may be had one of the finest views of the new 78-story, 1,030-foot Chrysler building, higher than the Eiffel tower at Paris. This stunning building, opened this week, will be "dated" within five years, according to one architect. He says that the architecture is so definitely and aggressively "modernistic," in all that the "modern" means nowadays, that it is sure to be outmoded soon, because the style is bound to pass before long.

But for the present this building is the great spectacle of Forty-second street, which has developed so rapidly from a goat lane to a billion-dollar boulevard. This street runs from a railroad ferryboat station across Manhattan to Tudor City, the recent "walk-to-work" apartment house enterprise. The Grand Central terminal and public library adorn it, and in 11 years it has increased $212,012,000 in land and building values.

An Old Wall Street Man's Church.

The centennial of the Zion Episcopal church, Douglaston, L. I., which was founded by Wynant Van Zandt, buried in Trinity churchyard here after reigning on Wall Street and at the Battery, is being celebrated this week.

In 1869 Jefferson Knight and his robber gang were captured, after two years in which this Douglaston church and the houses and barns of the community had been periodically despoiled. The trail of their booty led up the ladder to the belfry of the church. This belfry had been their headquarters. While the dominie was preaching below the scoundrels had been playing cards and counting their ill-gotten gains up there. In a dark attic were found silver, plated ware, books, disguises, skeleton keys, other burglars' instruments and cooking utensils.

Van Zandt bought 120 acres on Little Neck bay and founded Douglas Manor. The house, standing square and white among the trees, on a rise sloping to the water 300 yards away, is now the home of the Douglaston Club. Van Zandt founded Zion church and to make access easier built a causeway across a meadow and bridged the creek and gave the congregation a melodeon that will be used for accompaniment to the singing at an old-fashioned Sunday school service this first week of June.

The Background of Foreign Affairs

From the Alps to the Riviera; Disaffection Spreads in India; Johnson Pleases the Japanese; Hurry Up and Win.

BY HENRY KITTREDGE NORTON.

Il Duce is staging a revival of the Mussolinian melodrama. He has brought out and refurbished all the trappings and properties which helped to make fascism such a hit in the early '20s. There are the black shirts and the guns, the inflexible will of the fascists, the contemptible enemies, foreign and domestic, and the profuse vocabulary of provocation and menace. All these may be a little stage-worn, but they seem to provoke the same enthusiasm that an Italian audience bountifully accords to an old but favorite opera.

In view of the considerable difference between Mussolini's oratorical attitude toward neighboring nations and his actual diplomatic approach to the same nations, it is customary to discount his speeches—in fact, to look upon them as a show put on for the entertainment of the Italian people, and as having little or no international significance.

They do, however, have a very real international import. The effects are plainly visible in Jugo-Slavian hostile reactions, in the continuance of diplomatic intrigues throughout the Balkan states, and last, but not least, in Paris and in the earthly paradise between the Alps and the Mediterranean along the Riviera.

France's preoccupation with security is by no means purely political. It is finding material expression in an elaborate system of forts and defenses which has its beginning along the Belgian border and becomes a veritable network of defensive apparatus in the region of Metz and Toul. These defense works are, of course, inspired by the fear of a German incursion. But France's defense system envisages the possibility of an Italian attack as well. A second great fortified area is about to be constructed in the neighborhood of Nice and Monaco. The money has already been voted and completion is called for by 1935.

It is significant that the year 1935 will mark the beginning of the falling off in manpower, due to the decreased French birth rate during the war. Thus the seeds of Mussolini's warlike talk fall upon the fertile soil of French fear. It is not the least of the tasks of European diplomacy to remove the resulting noxious growth.

While Mr. Wedgewood Benn, secretary of state for India, by his assurance that the government has no intention to surrender to the Indian agitators, carries Mr. MacDonald safely past the danger of an adverse vote in parliament, disaffection, disorder and riot are spreading in India. Mr. Gandhi's anti-salt monopoly campaign continues despite his incarceration, and has provoked a number of clashes near Bombay. Other forms of resistance to British rule are reported from all over India, as far east as Rangoon in Burma.

Nor is the anti-government activity confined to the Hindus. In Bombay at least, there has been a serious clash between the police and a Moslem mob, which resulted in 34 deaths. Many Moslems are reported to have joined the Hindus in the raids on the salt works.

There is grim consolation in the fact that at Dacca fighting was renewed between Moslems and Hindus, which was only quelled after the police had brought out their armored cars.

The uprising among the tribes of the northwestern frontier gave reality to the menace which awaits an India which is no longer protected by British arms. The hand of Russia is discerned in the participation of Russian-trained agitators in the independence activities.

The situation as developed thus far offers ample confirmation of the assertion that India is too disunited to organize as an independent political entity without the cement of British administration. But it also affords considerable evidence that the independence agitation and all of the irresponsible forces which it has set in motion may make the administration of India on the present basis impossible. It is not the ability to organize that makes the independence movement dangerous to British rule, but its ability to disorganize—to upset all of the existing machinery of social and political control.

Representative Albert Johnson, chairman of the immigration committee and watchdog of the immigration barriers of the United States, has found the present an opportune moment to introduce a bill which would place Japanese immigrants on a quota similar to that provided for European immigrants, instead of excluding them entirely along with the other peoples of eastern Asia.

This proposal marks a new turn in an old controversy. In the old days when coming into the United States was a comparatively easy matter, the Japanese discovered Hawaii and then California. When they began to occupy the latter the Californians got up on their hind legs and began to fight the invasion of Japanese laborers. Mr. Roosevelt made a gentleman's agreement in 1907, under which the Japanese government agreed to keep its laborers from emigrating to California. This was a typical Roosevelt discrimination in favor of Japan. No other country had the same privilege.

The Californians did not like the arrangement and accused the Japanese of abusing it. They passed a number of restrictive laws and finally succeeded in getting into the immigration act of 1924 a clause excluding the Japanese entirely.

They were unexpectedly assisted in this by a letter from Ambassador Hanihara to Secretary Hughes, in which he spoke of the "grave consequences" which would follow the passage of such an act. Congress construed this as a threat and promptly passed the law. The Japanese ambassador suffered the "grave consequences" and was retired from the diplomatic service.

Japan has always considered the act of 1924 as an insult to her national dignity. As one of the great powers she has insisted on being treated on an equal footing with the powers of Europe. The actual number of Japanese immigrants is a minor matter, as only a few hundred a year are involved either way.

Japan has nursed her grievance and now rejoices in the proposal to meet her wishes. Despite the fact that the minister of the navy threatens to resign if the London treaty is ratified, Japan looks upon the Johnson amendment as the first fruits of that agreement. But even navel oranges do not ripen so quickly. It is more probable that the seed of the Johnson bill was sown at a meeting of Californian and Japanese labor leaders in Kyoto, under the auspices of the Institute of Pacific Relations, last October.

One of the chief items of national waste in most countries is the amount of energy which the government must devote to the business of keeping itself in power. Only a long-established and firmly rooted despotism is even approximately free from this waste. We know how often the suspicion of "politics" creeps into official actions in this country. The British cabinet has to spend a good share of its time explaining to parliament what it is doing, so that it will not be thrown out of office while it is trying to do it. In France it is estimated that 80 per cent of the time of a prime minister goes to maintaining his parliamentary majority—and even at that the average life of a government is less than a year.

The Chinese government seems to have reached the point where all its energy, time and money are required merely to continue its existence. Most, if not all, governmental functions, except that of maintaining the army, have apparently been abandoned. Bandit hordes are ravaging the Yangtse valley and even menace the great industrial city of Hankow, while the Nanking government fights for its life against the temporary alliance of Yen Shi Shan and Feng Yu Hsiang. To add to its embarrassment comes a notification from the minister of finance that the Nanking armies must win their victory with extreme promptness or there will be no further funds to carry on.

We shall soon learn whether the Nanking government requires more than 100 per cent of the power to remain in office.

Detailed Accusations Made Against Four Bishops in Charges Filed by Dr. Rembert G. Smith

WASHINGTON, Ga., May 31.—(Special.)—Claims that the rights of southern Methodist democrats were violated, and that the general conference resolutions as to prohibition were disregarded by Bishops Cannon, Mouzon, Moore and DuBose, were made in the charges filed against these bishops by Dr. Rembert G. Smith, pastor of the Washington Methodist church, at the general conference in Dallas.

In specific charges against Bishop Cannon it was held that he had borrowed from the funds of the board of temperance, social service for political purposes, and Bishop DuBose is held responsible for "false charges" against Dr. Smith.

The charges as filed with the committee on episcopacy were as follows:

Three general charges against Bishops Cannon, Mouzon, Moore and Dubose.

I.

The church and the episcopacy not political.

In the Hoover-Smith race of 1928, these bishops entered into personal and party politics in violation of the laws of the church.

The church is not political as shown by article of religion 13 as follows:

"The visible church of Christ is a congregation of faithful men in which the pure Word of God is preached, and the sacraments duly administered according to Christ's ordinance, in all those things that of necessity are requisite to the same."

The episcopacy is not political but apostolical with prophetical and pastoral functions. This is shown by the vows taken by a bishop when he is consecrated which are found in paragraph 664 of the discipline of 1928 to which the attention of this committee is hereby called. (Here follows the questions asked by the ordaining bishop and the answers of the bishop-elect when being examined before being ordained.)

The discipline nowhere directs or permits a bishop to go into personal and party politics. This is shown by chapter 3, section 2, of the discipline of 1926 in which the duties of a bishop are set forth. They are in brief:

"To choose the presiding elders, fix their stations, and change them when necessary; To change, receive and suspend preachers in the intervals of the conferences, as necessity may require, and as the discipline directs. To ordain bishops, elders and deacons; and to see that the names of the persons ordained by him be entered on the journals of the conference. To decide all questions of law coming before him in the regular business of an annual or district conference. When presiding in annual conference, to hear and decide appeals from the decision of the president of a quarterly or district conference on questions of law. To see that the districts be formed according to his judgment. When he judges it necessary, to divide a circuit, station, or mission into two or more, or unite two or more circuits or stations and appoint one pastor for the united congregation. To travel during the year, as far as practicable, through the presiding elders' districts which may be included in his episcopal district, in order to preach and to oversee the spiritual and temporal affairs of the church."

II.

General conference resolutions as to prohibition disregarded by Cannon, Mouzon, Moore and DuBose.

These bishops pointed to the resolutions of recent general conferences as to prohibition as the warrant for their support of Mr. Hoover and the republican party in 1928. Perhaps the strongest of these resolutions was the following passed by the general conference of 1926.

"The pronouncement of the bishops on the national prohibition law should be read from every pulpit in the church. It is a clarion call which should ring throughout our borders and stir all supporters of temperance and prohibition to action. The campaign for nullification must be met by a crusade for observance and enforcement. The law must be administered by its friends. In our states, from constable to governor, and in the nation, from revenue agent to president, officials must be selected who believe in enforcement, not only because prohibition is the law, but because it ought to be the law. Full power and authority of the states must be exercised in co-operation with the general government. To the attainment of these ends we call upon our preachers and teachers to give voice to the social creed of our church and upon all our people to assert their full influence as Christians and as patriotic citizens of the republic."

The general conference of 1926 made a wise and timely utterance in these resolutions. The chief topic in them is enforcement which has been the paramount issue ever since the amendment was adopted.

The republican party has been in control of the government nearly ever since the national prohibition law was passed. Neither the expenditure nor efforts for enforcement under this control of the republican party are satisfactory to prohibitionists nor can they possibly be indorsed by any one who is governed by the resolutions of the general conference of 1926 as to prohibition.

In supporting Mr. Hoover and the republican party in 1928, these bishops did not do what these resolutions requested. Mr. Hoover had no record as an aggressive prohibitionist before 1928. The republican party with Hon. Andrew W. Mellon in charge of the enforcement of the dry laws had a record of nullifying negligence and this record was well known.

Accordingly, the support of Mr. Hoover and the republican party in 1928 because of the prohibition issue by these bishops constituted contempt of the general conference of 1926 as to the matter of its resolutions on prohibition above quoted. These bishops were renegade from their responsibilities for prohibition as those responsibilities were defined by the resolutions of the general conference of 1926.

In going into personal and party politics these bishops also disobeyed the voice of the general conference of 1926 as it was heard in the resolutions on prohibition. The last sentence in those resolutions is as follows:

"To the attainment of these ends we call upon our preachers and teachers to give voice to the social creed of our church and upon all our people to assert their full influence as Christians and as patriotic citizens of our republic."

They were directed as preachers in the church, as all other preachers were, to use specified non-political ways and means in the interest of prohibition. In their outspoken support of Mr. Hoover and the republican party they went beyond and disregarded these directions of the general conference.

III.

Rights of Southern Methodist democrats violated by bishops.

In supporting Mr. Hoover and the republican party in 1928 these bishops trespassed on the rights of members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, who do not support bishops with their substance or their loyalty for political functions, and they particularly trespassed on Southern Methodist democrats who do not support bishops to attack their political party nor its candidate.

Many Southern Methodists did not believe that, everything considered, the republican party deserved support in 1928 either for moral or political reasons, and the support of this party by these bishops was a trespass on their rights whether or not their convictions were correct as to the unworthiness of the republican party.

Three Special Charges Against Bishop Cannon.

I. Bishop Cannon Borrowing Funds of the Board of Temperance, Social Service for Political Purposes.

Bishop Cannon admits in the Christian Advocate (Nashville) of August 9, 1929, that he borrowed from Dr. E. L. Crawford, secretary and treasurer of the board of temperance and social service, $303.52 to pay on the expense of the call for the Asheville anti-Smith meeting. This loan should not have been made particularly as many contributors to this fund were democrats who did not desire the defeat of Governor Smith. This loan, having been made for a political purpose, should have been reported to the clerk of the house of representatives in compliance with the federal corrupt practices act of 1926, but no such report has been made.

II.

The Matter of Campaign Expenses.

In the report filed with the clerk of the house of representatives by A. L. Burroughs, treasurer of the anti-Smith committee with headquarters in Richmond, Va., it appears that from July 28, 1928, to February 11, 1929, there was paid to Bishop Cannon, chairman of said committee, for expenses in the campaign $1,873.25. This covered a period of six months and three days which was an average expenditure of $10 per day. However, the period of active campaign was only about four months—from July 5 to November 6 date of election. If all of the money had been spent in this period the average expenditure per day would have been more than $15. This committee is asked to decide whether it is proper for a bishop to receive funds for expenses from a political committee, and whether or not it is possible for a bishop to give as much time as Bishop Cannon did in political organizing and speaking and at the same time to do the work of a bishop. In asking these questions no insinuation at all is made touching the amount of the money received by Bishop Cannon during a period of six months from the anti-Smith committee of Richmond, Va.

III.

Bishop Cannon's Charge Against the Writer.

In his widely distributed defense of himself set forth in the pamphlet entitled "Unspotted from the World," Bishop Cannon charges this writer with being "a political assassin." He makes this charge because I published in the church papers and in a few daily papers, including the Lynchburg (Va.) News, an attack on the board of temperance and social service because of its loan through Dr. Crawford to Bishop Cannon of money paying on the expense of the Asheville anti-Smith meeting, and because said dealings of Bishop Cannon with Kable & Co., were considered and approved by said board which had no jurisdiction over the matter. My contention was that these matters were trespasses against the church. Bishop Cannon claims that in publishing these facts and my interpretation of them, that I was a political assassin. This I deny and request this committee to make a decision between Bishop Cannon and myself in this matter.

Special Charge Against Bishop Mouzon.

Bishop Mouzon misrepresenting Methodism as to the political rights of Roman Catholic citizens.

In suggesting to the preachers of the church in an article in St. Louis Christian Advocate of August 1, 1928, that they preach a series of sermons on the following subjects:

1. Romanism, the religion of external authority: Protestantism, the religion of the spirit.

2. The spiritual authority of the Bible versus the dead hand of traditionalism.

3. The priesthood of all believers; or the rights of the individual to come to God without the intermediation of a priest.

4. Salvation through faith in Christ rather than through belief in creed.

5. The ethical emphasis of protestantism as against the sacramentarianism of Rome.

6. Church and state in a Roman Catholic and in Protestant teaching.

7. The miracles of the New Testament and Roman Catholic pseudo-miracles.

8. The duty of the church to interest itself in public morals.

Bishop Mouzon was in charge of the conferences in North and South Carolina, in which states there are very few Roman Catholics. Nor are there many through the entire territory of our church in the United States. His suggestion to the preachers that they make addresses or preach sermons on the above eight subjects was under the circumstances caused by the desire on the part of Bishop Mouzon to secure votes against Governor Smith, the candidate of the democratic party, for the presidency, because he was a member of the Roman Catholic church. The bishop was undertaking to reach a political direction by an insidious indirection. Southern Methodist would have preferred if the bishop had plainly said that in his judgment every southern Methodist preacher should make eight stump speeches in the pulpit against Governor Smith. If he had done this he would have deserved praise, at least, for his candor.

Our church in Article 23 of religion approved the Constitution of the United States in which Roman Catholic citizens were given equal political rights with Protestants. Bishop Mouzon's suggestion was un-American, un-Methodistic and incendiary, and the approval of it by this committee or the general conference will be disastrous both to the church and the nation.

Four Special Charges Against Bishop Moore.

I.

The following statement is taken from an article by Bishop Moore in the Texas Christian Advocate of July 19, 1928:

"Last November the statement was made in the periodical The Nation, that Governor Smith drinks every day, and the number of his cocktails and highballs is variously estimated at from four to eight." The broadcasting of this rumor by Bishop Moore was improper conduct and unless he can prove to this committee that Governor Smith does thus drink, he deserves reprimand.

II.

In the same article Bishop Moore attacks party pledges and suggests that they are "morally dead letters and should carry no moral obligation whatsoever." That a bishop should thus attack an elemental ethical principle of personal integrity misrepresents the church which believes with the Psalmist that he is a good citizen "who swears to his own hurt and changes not." This committee is called on to disapprove the position of Bishop Moore as to this.

III.

Bishop Moore asserts in the same article "Governor Smith comes to us borne of solid Tammany, solid wets, solid Roman Catholicism, solid south." The bishop's statement that all the wets were for Smith was untrue, as he should have known, for some wets were for Hoover.

His statement that all the Roman Catholics were for Smith was false, and created enmity against Roman Catholics which they did not deserve.

This committee is called on to disapprove the statement of Bishop Moore as to this matter. If this is not done, it indorses a false statement by Bishop Moore as to Roman Catholic citizens and sanctions him as a disturber of the harmony which should exist between religious groups in the nation.

IV.

This committee is asked to find from Bishop Moore whether or not his expenses in the campaign of 1928 in Texas and New Mexico were as much as $50 and if so and he did not receive money for them from the republican, the anti-Smith democratic, or other political committee that he make a report to the clerk of the house of representatives as required by the federal corrupt practices act of 1925.

Four Special Charges Against Bishop DuBose.

I.

Bishop DuBose False Charges Against This Writer.

In a letter to The Atlanta Constitution of September 23, 1928, Bishop DuBose says:

"Brother Smith has been identified as a supporter of the candidacy of Governor Smith." He also says in the same card: "But soon after the opening of the campaign, Brother Smith began to wobble on the gudgeon of wet opposition. Later he appears to have wobbled into the Al Smith brine."

These statements were false and I call upon this committee for a decision of the issue between Bishop DuBose and myself.

II.

The Assault of Bishop DuBose on the Memphis Laymen.

The following article appeared in The Atlanta Constitution of September 2, 1928:

"MEMPHIS, Tenn., Sept. 1.—(AP)—The 'political activity of certain bishops and ministers' of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was deplored in a statement issued here tonight by 20 prominent laymen, who declared that 'no southern Methodist pulpit should be a political stump.' The signers said they were southern democrats and declared there was no conflict of allegiance as between church and party.

"'We believe that such activity tends to political domination by an ecclesiastical body,' their statement added. 'It inevitably does so. This we hold to be un-American and not in accordance with the policy and traditions of our church, and contrary to the spirit of democracy. Neither church, bishop nor pastor has any right to prescribe the qualifications for the office of president. The Constitution of the United States does that.

"'Our church has ever championed the cause of true temperance. Sobriety and religious tolerance are cornerstones of southern Methodism. Yet one of our bishops is quoted in the public press as saying he cannot understand how a Christian can vote for the nominee of our party. Another one of our bishops is quoted in the press as having invited contributions to aid him in his efforts to disrupt our party in the south and to "organize and deliver" votes at the polls.' Neither bishop was named."

The statement of Bishop Warren A. Candler, concurred in by Bishop Collins Denny, quoting from the address of the bishops at a general conference held in Memphis in 1894 that "our church is strictly a religious and in nowise a political body," was commended.

Those signing the statement were: T. K. Riddick, J. E. Holmes, G. T. Fritzhugh, L. M. Stratton, R. C. Brown, Jeff B. Marmon, Fred M. McDonald, W. Wightman Hughes, E. E. Jeter, H. H. Honnell, G. H. Hayden, Millsap Fitzhugh, R. I. Moore, Wils Davis, Lamar Heiskell, J. P. Alley, C. P. Proctor, A. W. Ketchum, H. D. Burkett and Hugh Stanton.

To these laymen Bishop DuBose replied that they were "protesting against the church in the interest of a wet and dangerous candidate."

These laymen were protesting against political activities of certain bishops and ministers who were being supported by their substance and loyalty for pastoral service and not for political activities. They were contending for a fundamental right of laymen in our church. The right to have from their bishops and ministers what the laws of the church set forth. They were also defending themselves against moral coercion by bishops and ministers in the matter of their political rights. As democrats they had, of course, a special grievance against Bishop DuBose and the other three political bishops who were spending much time, work and influence in attacking the democratic party while receiving material support from many southern Methodists who were members of that party.

In this matter the Memphis laymen were justified and Bishop DuBose was in error. I call on this committee to make a decision between the Memphis laymen and Bishop DuBose.

III.

The Improper Insinuation of Bishop DuBose at Pleasant Grove, Tenn.

The following appears in the Christian Advocate (Nashville) of July 13, 1928:

"Bishop H. M. DuBose was the principal speaker at Pleasant Grove, in the Memphis conference, July 1. 'A high light in the bishop's discourse,' writes a local correspondent, 'was the statement that he could not see how any Christian man or woman could vote for Al Smith for president of the United States.'"

Though later Bishop DuBose admitted that many Christians would vote for Governor Smith, this insinuation was improper, and I ask this committee to so decide.

There have been good Christians on opposite sides of every political battle in our entire history.

IV.

The Matter of Campaign Expenses.

Bishop DuBose did much political work in the campaign of 1928 in Kentucky and Tennessee and in other states. Dr. E. L. Crawford, secretary of the board of temperance and social service, publicly congratulated Bishop DuBose, president of the Holston conference, because "his questionnaire did much to carry four states republican."

I request this committee to ask Bishop DuBose if his expenses in the campaign were as much as $50 and if he did not receive money for them from the republican, the anti-Smith democratic, or any other political committee, to make a report to the clerk of the house of representatives so as to comply with the federal corrupt practices act of 1925.

Dream Country

Oh! I'm living in a country
Where each home is deemed a shrine,
And is free from all taxation,
Where its owner calls it "mine,"
When he's worked so hard to buy it
For his little family—
Yes, I'm living in a country
Where all homes are quite taxfree.

Little green home in the valley,
Peaceful as the heavens there;
Stately mansion on the hill-top,
Drinking in the morning air;
Old log cabin in the mountains,
By its door a chopping ax—
Oh! I'm living in a country
Where these homes are free from tax.

Home is where the white-winged angels
Leave the babies in mother's care,
And the good and kindly father
Gives his all for their welfare;
Home is just a little kingdom
Built upon a love divine—
And its owner pays no taxes
In this dream country of mine.

THE COSMOPOLITE

BY ROSE PATTERSON.

PARIS, May 31.—A new excitement has been boiling up in Montparnasse—another "ism."

Perhaps it may be looked upon as a particular branch of the Spanish invasion that is taking place. Not many days since, the boulevards began to grow sombreros. Bands of Spaniards, too, have been leading little donkeys along streets like the Avenue D'Italie.

More professionally laden than Robert Louis Stevenson's Modestine, the small beasts are hung with alcazars, or specially porous earthware vases for keeping water cool on hot summer days. The Spaniards have been selling a great many of these jars because France does not make this kind of pottery now.

Well, the gentleman who has set the Ateliers of Montparnasse buzzing with his new cult is also a Spaniard. His name is Gines Parra and his particular excitement is "gleeism." And while the salon pursues its annual orthodox way, this artist is exhibiting some most weird pictures.

We are, according to Mr. Parra, slaves to the subconscious; this slavery we must not endure, but rather advance (or retreat!) to a state of ecstacy. The ecstacy he has, he says, depicted. Many are enthusiastic and all the Montparnasse habitues chatter perpetually of gleeism. But just how many will permanently throw off the shackles of the subconscious remains to be seen.

Whether gleeism is in any way responsible or not I cannot say, but Montparnasse is adding free fights to its attractions of late. When there is a job going as waiter or doorkeper in wild Bohemia now the applicant who is muscular and has some pretensions to wrestling stands a good chance. A very lively clientele, with ways fractious and wilful, seems to have grown up in Montparnasse and more than one safe customer has awakened within the last few days in a hospital.

The Academy of Science has just sealed and deposited in its safe an account of an experiment which, begun only the other day, is to last for 250 years. The account is labelled "not to be opened until the year 2180."

The experiment is the work of the Swiss glacier commission and its object is to determine the exact speed at which certain glaciers move. They only move at the rate of a few inches a year, but a very accurate measurement is required.

Metal receptacles, like shells, were therefore buried in the ice at the starting point of various glaciers, each shell containing a scientific record of observations already made concerning the glacier as well as the date, hour and place of the shell's burial in the ice.

When two and a half centuries have rolled by and each glacier has carried the shells to its foot, the academy will break the seals of the record just put away and add much valuable information, it is hoped, from the gathering of the recovered and much-travelled shells.

Rome: Italy Honors Virgil.

The bi-millenary of the birth of Virgil, on the ides of October, will be celebrated very specially in Italy in many ways.

Since 1928 the American Classical League has formed 30 committees to organize Virgilian fetes this year in the United States, besides all the music, lectures, films and readings that America will devote to the poet's honor; so you may well imagine what Italy is doing!

Forty orators chosen by the Royal Academy have already commemorated the poet in 40 cities and great celebrations are to take place in Rome on October 15. Special editions of the poet's works are being issued by different cities. Milan is publishing the facsimile of the famous Ambrosian library codex of Virgil, once owned and annotated by Etrarch, while Florence is reproducing the Medicean Virgil of the Laurentian library.

Naples is contributing the restoration of the Columbarium, popularly known as the Tomb of Virgil, and of the Grotto of the Sibyl at Cumae. Popular fetes, congresses, exhibitions of agriculture and bee-keeping will culminate in the opening of the Lucus Vergilianus, the great park at the gates of Mantua, which contains all the plants and flowers that Virgil named in his works.

Mantua . . . his birthplace . . . should and will come first. The Reale Accademia Virgiliana is bringing out an edition of the complete works of the poet printed in red and black and adorned with 40 wood engravings, as well as a volume of essays on Virgil contributed by all the most eminent Virgilians.

And the Italian government has decided to strike a medal to commemorate the bi-millenary. On one side of it fame places a wreath on Virgil's brow, on the reverse Anchises, meeting Ulysses in the Elysian fields, describes to him the future glory of Rome.

Venice: Water Undermines Palace.

One corner of the famous "Golden House" (the Ca' D'Oro) in Venice has been showing some bad cracks and splits lately, so the palace is under repair.

In view of these cracks it was decided that the foundations must undergo very careful examination, no easy feat since they lie deep in the water. They have cut off the water round the threatened corner of the palace by a wall made of wooden poles driven into the bottom of the lagoon. The water is then pumped out all the time, leaving the foundations uncovered.

The damaged portions of the historic building will be carefully reinforced.

Berlin: Men Become Fashion-Minded.

Herr Curt Hagen, of the Stuttgart opera, is the founder of a movement for "the improvement of men's fashions." Many famous people, he says, have already joined him. Herr Hagen feels very strongly indeed about what he calls "der unfug" of male apparel.

"Der Unfug" means disorder, or nuisance; Herr Hagen presumably means general unsuitability, but he also wants to simplify men's dress. He longs to introduce into Europe generally the "Schlupfzug," a simple, pull-over sort of garment.

He quotes the Prince of Wales as having approved of the "schlupfzug" and declares that his royal highness said it was of great economic and hygienic significance. Whether or no, the prince has ever seen a real "schlupfzug," according to Herr Hagen's ideal, is hard to say, but anyway the movement is stirring up little breezes of interest in clothes for men generally and we may perhaps see some striking things in the shop windows and on the streets as the summer weather descends upon us.

Vienna: Figdor Collection on Block.

The renowned Figdor collection, before being sold at auction, is to be on show at the former military casino from June 3 to June 10.

The late Dr. Albert Figdor made a unique collection of objects d'art, spending much energy and money for many years in gathering together furniture, dating back to the thirteenth century, pictures, ornaments and works by medieval goldsmiths.

Dr. Figdor, before the war, wanted to leave his treasures to the imperial museum but the Hapsburgs refused to accept the gift under the conditions he imposed. After his death, heirs sold the collection to Nebehay, the Berlin art dealer, for half a million pounds sterling.

An Austrian lawyer subsequently secured official permission for a public auction of the collection in Vienna, conditionally upon securing a small part of it for the government.

Madrid: Hobos Put to Work.

The beggars who come to town here will not have too easy a time of it in future. They have grown to such vast numbers that the board of aldermen has decided to spend some two million pesetas in creating a park which shall do special service as a "beggars' reservation." Policemen will be instructed to arrest the incorrigible idlers, who will be set to work making roads, digging ditches and getting busy about the city's jobs generally.

Bucharest: They Do the Shimmy.

A very interesting new sect has been discovered at Veresti in the Rotolani district of Rumania, called the "Sect of Tremblers." Members, at the general meetings, lie flat on the ground and proceed to tremble.

By this continued trembling their "patriarch" or leader assures them they will shake their sins away, though a good deal of weeping is required in addition. Tremblings are held twice weekly, followed by many hours of steady crying.

Zurich: Sign Language for Tourists.

The new road traffic signs published by the federal council and recently issued to the cantonal governments have been made as simple as possible for foreign tourists.

Thus all red signs will now mean that roads are blocked and blue signs will indicate the best roads. Boards bearing only the names of the places will mark entrances and exits of villages. Signposts, which you may know by their white tops, will bear only the name of the nearest larger place, with the distance given in kilometers.

In the cities themselves blue boards will indicate "parking allowed" and blue boards with a red edge will signify "no parking. Danger . . . except for dangerous curves and crossings, which will be marked as such . . . will be indicated by an exclamation mark, meaning "Look out!"

SEEING LONDON

BY JOAN LITTLEFIELD.

(Staff Correspondent of The Atlanta Constitution and the North American Newspaper Alliance.)

LONDON, May 31.—Last winter the dancing vogue waned and wilted under the onslaught of the skating boom, but now it has very definitely reasserted its supremacy, for not since the war has there been a season with so many brilliant dances as are now adding to London's night gaiety.

Not only are there the usual batch of private debutante dances, but hardly a week goes by without the advent of some interesting charity ball of the first magnitude. During the past few weeks we have had a May ball, a sports ball, which included a midnight cabaret featuring sporting "turns," an Italian ball, a "Journey's End" ball, complete with dugouts, orderlies and V. C. S.'s, but minus the guns, and a Queen Charlotte birthday ball.

The last named ball, in aid of the Queen Charlotte maternity hospital, was a very picturesque affair. Princess Beatrice, a great-granddaughter of Queen Charlotte, was the central figure, and 18 of the prettist debutantes of the season carried her, as she sat upon a dais in the ballroom, a huge birthday cake, bearing 186 candles, one for each year of the hospital's existence. This was cut by the princess and distributed among the dancers by the debutantes.

The most interesting and original affair of all, however, was the Empire ball on May 26, which was attended by the Prince of Wales.

The piece d'occasion was a pageant entitled "Britain and Her Industries" in which many people well known in society and on the stage took part. Miss Lily Elsie, representing Britain, wore a very original dress with hanging sleeves of ermine and a skirt of shimmering diamonds. She wore altogether about one hundred thousand pounds worth of precious jewels, including a tiara of sapphires, rubies and emeralds, a diamond necklace with a pendant the size of an ordinary cigaret case and a ring containing what is claimed to be the largest diamond set in any ring in the world.

Of British industries, the ladies representing coal wore tights covered with black sequins and black skull caps with lumps of "coal" attached. Those representing shipping wore headdresses of red and yellow steamer funnels and dresses and trains of cardboard "waves."

Wool was impersonated by Viscountess Scarsdale, wearing a crinoline of wool of all colors of the rainbow. She was attended by the film triplets, Angela, Claudine and Claudette Mawby, of Hollywood fame, who appeared as playful, woolly lambs.

The "chemicals" section wore costumes which were a mixture of testtubes, retorts and other laboratory apparatus, but as these were made out of papier mache, they were not as uncomfortable as one would imagine!

The King's Birthday.

When the king celebrates his birthday on June 3, he will again be able to attend the trooping of the colors in person and visitors of London will have another opportunity of seeing a ceremony unrivalled for its pageantry. The event has several historical origins, some going back as far as the Restoration.

The guards themselves, however, credit the Duke of Cumberland with its introduction after a burglary which took place at Kensington palace in 1738, when the burglars' escape was supposed to be due to the drunkenness of the officer in charge. It seems that the slow march past the king, which occurs during the ceremony, was originally intended as a test of a somewhat similar nature to those employed by doctors when over-enthusiastic revellers are brought before a magistrate!

Selecting Guests for the Royal Ascot.

The Royal Ascot is usually considered to be the peak of the season and admission to the royal enclosure, socially one of the most exclusive places in the world, is an honor coveted by so many people that a special secretarial department has to be established at St. James' palace and an extra staff engaged months beforehand to deal with the enormous rush of applications.

The task of selection is a monumental one, for every applicant is closely examined in order to find out whether the person concerned is sufficiently impeccable to be admitted to what is, in effect, their majesties' private lawn.

The inevitable delay incurred by this procedure is a cause of great anxiety to women applicants, for the choice of a suitable ensemble for Ascot is a matter of many months of cogitation and consultation with one's dressmaker.

This year, it has been decreed that the large hat shall make a spectacular return to the most fashionable race course in the world, and creations a yard or more wide are being prepared by the milliners to distract male attention from the principal business of the day. They are to be made chiefly of muslin, trimmed with printed chiffon scarves and adorned with posies or violets, daisies or rosebuds, and will be worn with long, dainty very feminine dresses.

There is only one flaw to the alluring picture, and that is the English climate, which is notoriously unkind to fashionable race meetings. One drop of rain and the largest muslin hat is but a ruin. A wet ascot may mean a precipitate return to the "modern" woman!

Something New in Bedrooms.

Guy Elwes, a son of the late Gervase Elwes, is a person of immense energy and has many original ideas. He is very much interested in house decoration and the bedroom which he has designed for his wife and which has been carried out by his own workmen, is one of the wonders of London.

The ceiling, which looks like silver, is composed of sheets of very thin tin; the walls are painted blue-green, and the floor is of black composition, veined with lines of silver. Curtains of bright blue, lined with cherry red, hang from the shiny ceiling all round the golden bed, to which steps lead up. The mantlepiece and doors are made of looking glass, the former having an elaborate golden pattern inlaid to match the bed.

Mr. Elwes is now designing a bathroom in shades of red, which will have glass panels inlaid in the eighteenth century manner with "Chinoiserie" patterns.

The morning room is adorned with frescoes painted by Miss Margret Gilbert, a young woman with a puckish sense of humor, who is much in demand just now. The frescoes are fantasies in a mid-Victorian pseudo-classical style.

A Cup and Saucer Nightmare.

Cup-and-saucer cubism is the latest cure for the early morning drowsiness. Instead of murmuring "What time is it?" and promptly going to sleep again without waiting for an answer, you are with one wink of an eye aroused forcibly and irrevocably by a teaset which looks like a Russian ballet master's nightmare solidified.

It is a tea set reminiscent of crazy paving of euclid made tangible, a tea set composed of angles and triangles and painted in circles of black and red and orange and blue and green. Spouts and lids and handles are triangular and every vessel has a painted case propped up by little triangles of pottery.

One could not sleep amid such a riot of color and design. Perhaps that is why the new China has become so popular. It is a neat and efficacious way of arousing the household without bickering and fuss.

Music from Ancient Egypt.

Charity matinees are almost as plentiful as charity balls. But the performance which Lady Newne is arranging to take place at the London hippodrome on June 3 is to be something really different. In it ancient Egypt will be brough to life. The beautiful Queen Nefert-Iti will reign again, Cleopatra will sail the Nile once more with her Anthony, and for the first time Londoners will have an opportunity of hearing the music of the early inhabitants of Egypt.

The guests will listen to the rhythmical clapping of 10,000 B. C. in the tableau showing the Badarin man, and they will hear old Egyptian instruments which have been copied specially for the tableaux and some of which can still be seen on the monuments of upper and lower Egypt. Among them are the nay, darabouk-keh, lyre, harp, sistram and pipes.

War Play From the Civilian Side.

The latest writer of a war play is Miss Diana Hamilton, brother of Patrick, the author of "Rope," and herself a very accomplished and beautiful actress, who sprang to fame in "Outward Bound."

Miss Hamilton's play, written in collaboration with her other brother, Bruce, is called "The Home Front," and deals with the civilian attitude towards the war. The scene is a London boarding house, the hero, A. C. C. on leave and the heroine a naturalized German girl, whom he loves. There is biting satire, as well as a good deal of humor in the piece, which has just been produced in Birmingham by Sir Barry Jackson.

"Call of the Morn"

BY ERNEST NEAL,
Poet Laureate of Georgia.

Not only "The hills of Habersham;"
Not only "The valleys of Hall,"
But beauties near
With voices clear
To the soul within us call.

Hence, every morn from six to seven,
In a boat on wheels I glide
With the sun's first rays
Thru the winding ways
In Atlanta's great North Side.

Oh, where can you find on earth below—
In the glorious May or June—
Visions of spring
That seem to sing
With the music of heaven in tune,
Like that—every morn from six to seven—
I find on the "Peachtree road?"
What sweeter thrill
Than the "Howell Mill"
Could foreign antiques afford?

* * *

There's "Northside drive,"
And "Andrews drive"
And glorious "Morningside,"
With their folks and flowers,
Their birds and bowers,
And lawns a-spreading wide.

Life's weary load
On "Pace's Ferry road"—
Transmuted by home-building scenes—
In a mansion discloses
'Mong rapture and roses
Home's budget of daisies and dreams.

For all this wealth in "simple fee"
Men struggle with a will.
Yet, all the town belongs to me—
In the landscape, comes my thrill.

To all the town I, too, belong,
And that's just why I sing;
My soul I coin in simple song,
My heart to you I wing.

* * *

On the North Side, the South Side,
Wherever I chance to be;
On the East Side, the West Side
What beautiful homes I see!

Not from her lofty temples of trade
Nor from her busy mart,
But from the homes Atlanta has made
Must come Atlanta's heart.

Oh builders must come from out these homes
Who must higher than buildings grow;
For what are towers, turrets, and domes,
If the builders are built too low?

Mouth Health and Beauty Culture

This is the first of a series of articles on mouth health furnished to The Constitution by the Georgia State Dental Society. The information and advice contained herein is approved by the society as authentic and thoroughly scientific.

What is a smile worth? How much is it worth to show beautiful teeth that glisten like diamonds. The smile is a charm of untold value and beautiful teeth are indeed pearls of great price. Sometimes it is better not to smile if one shows only stained, ugly or irregular teeth, and what a calamity this is, for our whole disposition is affected by it, and teeth like this are so unnecessary with modern dental methods.

The lower half of the face belongs to the mouth and is greatly influenced by the condition of the oral structures. Irregular or crooked teeth give us a face that nature did not intend us to have—one that is unbalanced, twisted and deformed, thus spoiling the beauty of otherwise normal and perfect eyes, hair and complexion.

What have irregular teeth to do with mouth health or beauty? Irregular teeth and diseased teeth are only too often the direct cause of poor health, which in turn destroys beauty. When one was a child, perhaps if this tooth had been straightened or that tooth filled, you would not be wearing an unsightly bridge or that unnatural set of plates or false teeth. Nature intends for us to be pleasing to look upon, yet there are many of us who get the wrong start and if we could suddenly see our mouths as others see them, we would get a shock.

Results of Bad Teeth.

Not only may our faces be out of proportion due to irregular and diseased teeth, but indigestion may result, which in turn may produce skin blemishes. A deformity of the mouth or bad teeth may spoil our disposition, as well as our digestions, and bad dispositions are most often accompanied by frowns and wrinkles which mar beauty. Health and good looks are greatly dependent upon good, sound, regular teeth.

Loss of teeth on one side of the mouth causes a wasting away of the muscles on that side. This helps produce a sinking in of the face on that side, and in this case the muscles of the other side become overdeveloped through over use, producing an unbalanced face. Loss of the posterior teeth may also cause a shifting of the teeth, bringing about abnormal stresses that may protrude the anterior teeth. In many cases the bite (overlap of the upper teeth over lower teeth) is shortened, which brings the point of the chin and the tip of the nose too close together. Again this condition often causes lapped, irregular or twisted anterior teeth. There is a symmetry of relation of the parts of the face which is ideal, and this is largely dependent upon the relation and arrangement of the teeth, and without this beauty or good looks cannot prevail. The "Hapsburg chin," once considered aristocratic, is now recognized as only a condition of irregularity.

One reason for oral neglect is that we say we do not have the time or that it costs too much. Keeping the mouth in a state of health is not an expensive program, but sometimes putting it back in that state after neglect costs us very dearly. A good toothbrush and dental tape carefully and vigorously used are necessary requisites in bringing about or keeping a healthy condition of the teeth and surrounding oral structures. We ought to think as much of our teeth as we do of the dishes from which we eat. These are washed after every meal and our teeth should merit equal care. Cultivate this habit of taping the teeth once a day and brushing them after every meal and soon we will not miss the time or effort it takes to properly care for the mouth. Fifteen minutes a day, five minutes three times a day, will mean years in prolonged life, an exceptional investment.

The Search for Attractiveness.

It is estimated that most women spend two hours daily before the mirror or in some manner of beauty treatment. Statistics show that there are about 22,000 beauty shops in the United States doing an annual business of about $1,825,000,000. This is not all wasted time, but part of it could be made more profitable.

Beauty treatments on the teeth have the peculiar effect of improving the health and prolonging life as well as beautifying the countenance.

Every drug store contains a large cosmetics department, and, in fact, beauty culture and its branches have entered big business since we spend nearly two billions per year on cosmetics.

The annual jewelry bill of the nation, $350,000,000, is a considerable contribution to the art of keeping beautiful.

Our annual soap bill of $422,842,480 is also a tidy fortune spent in the pursuit of beauty through cleanliness and health.

When we consider these and other thousands spent in efforts to keep ourselves in a state of health and to make ourselves beautiful and attractive, are not the few dollars that we each spend during the year for toothbrushes, paste and dental tape negligible?

Beautiful teeth are one of our greatest assets in business, social and everyday life. In this day and time when appearances count so much, we should have clean, shining teeth to help out our smile. If we would advance ourselves socially or in business we must spend more time on our mouth. Care of the teeth must be constant in order to successfully combat the billions of disease germs in the normal mouth, preventing them from causing the teeth to decay and the surrounding gum tissue diseased.

We cannot all have beautiful white, even teeth, possibly on account of neglect in childhood, but at least we can all have clean teeth. Start now on a program of prevention armed with a good brush, dental tape, massage and stimulation plus; last but not least, periodic advice and prophylactic treatment from your dentist. Good teeth, good health, good looks.

EVERYDAY QUESTIONS

BY DR. S. PARKES CADMAN.

I am 22 years old, finishing college, and about to marry a fine chap who is as devoted to me as I am to him. But unfortunately I already have a domestic problem on my hands in that my widowed mother resents my prospective marriage. I am the youngest of the family and the only one left with mother, my brothers and sisters being all married, with homes and families of their own and a fair share of prosperity.

Moreover, I am in the midst of a religious upheaval. I have been a fundamentalist, but in the light of my college courses, I don't know what I believe at the present time.

Therefore, I have two questions: First, should I give up marriage for the sake of my mother, and secondly, what is one to do when reason conflicts with one's previous religious beliefs?

Do not forego marriage if you are convinced, as you appear to be, that you have met your life partner. Since your brothers and sisters have established homes and are faring prosperously, call a family council and bid it plan for your mother's future care and comfort, so that she can live in happiness and peace near you or any of her other children.

The religious problem should slowly settle itself. Do not forget that what is needed today is not less but more fundamentalism. That kind is found by digging beneath creedal forms to their underlying religious realities. Jesus said, "The letter killeth, the spirit giveth life." Your personal experience of His spirit, fellowship and direction is the chief consideration.

As time passes you will discover that truth consists in right relations, hence the search for it should be a mutual enterprise between your Lord and yourself. His religion does not depend on outward things. It is the divine life of the soul, self verifying, and bound up with the Absolute incarnated in history. He makes no demand that you shall conform to every orthodox opinion of your sect, or crucify your intellectual integrity in order to salvage your beliefs.

Did He not say, "Every one that is of the truth, heareth my voice?" The unbiased examination of Christian documents and Christian annals demonstrates that the Christ of St. Paul, St. Chrysostom, St. Francis and St. Bernard, of John Bunyan, John Wesley, General Booth, Dwight L. Moody, Phillips Brooks and Cardinal Mercier, is the Christ of every one who believes upon Him here and now. This faith is the real fundamental, the rock, the fortress and the palace of your religion.

A number of prominent Atlanta officers will assist the headquarters secretary, Miss Ruby Rivers, Mrs. O. L. Taylor, Mrs. W. H. Preston, Mrs. Robert H. McDougall, Jr., Mrs. K. L. Reeves and others. The bronze tablets bearing the names of headquarters founder and builders will not be dedicated until a later date as they will not be completed and installed for some months.

This reception is in the nature of a house warming, to have Atlantans inspect the headquarters and what it has to offer for the welfare of the state, and to become better acquainted with those in charge. It is hoped that all of the members of the headquarters committee of directors will be present. Invitations go to the governor, mayor, ministers and their wives and the heads of all women's organizations in Atlanta. It is expected that many parties will motor from over the state for the afternoon. Numbers of Atlanta committees are busy arranging to make this an outstanding social gathering.

Flower Mission and Relief.

June is associated with the flower mission and relief in the minds and hearts of W. C. T. U. members, it is one of the most popular of the departments for every union can operate it whether large or small, urban or rural. The work done in Georgia in this department is largely due to the leadership of Mrs. W. H. Preston, of Atlanta, its director for many years. It gives the members an opportunity to express their love for Christ through the gifts of comfort and cheer which they distribute to His needy ones. The distribution of flowers on flower mission day, June 9, the birthday of the first national director, Jennie Casseday, also the birthday of Mrs. Preston, to those who are shut in or ill in hospitals and in institutions, the planting of trees, shrubs, flowers, beautifying yards, parks, vacant lots, contribution to the relief of the needy and suffering at any time, promoting the observance of Golden Rule Sunday are some of the features of the work of this department.

Programs with materials for carrying it out, prepared by Mrs. Preston, have been sent every union. Additional supplies may be secured from the state headquarters, and three playlets may be secured from her at 10 cents each. Address her at 121 Georgia avenue, S. W., Atlanta. All gifts of flowers, dainties, or more substantial comforts should have one of the specially prepared text cards attached by white ribbon. Local flower mission directors should secure hundreds of the cards for distribution to members in her union, and through them to the sick and shut-ins.

Texas Greetings.

Mrs. Erminia T. Folsom, state chairman for the love letter greetings, Capitol Station, Austin, Texas, writes in part in the May Texas White Ribbon as follows: "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye love one another. At the midyear meeting of the Texas W. C. T. U. it was decided that you and I should send love letter greetings to our comrades in other states telling them of Houston, of Texas, of our national W. C. T. U. convention being held here November 12-20, where we can let every member of that convention know something of real southern hospitality.

"Texas members are to write some member of a local union in another state. We want a member in the more than 10,000 local unions in our sister states to receive such a letter." Then she tells the plan by which contacts will be made and special interest in the coming convention created in all Texas members as well as in other states. This is only one of the many plans of Texas for helping the 56th convention to be the best in the history of the organization. Let Georgia have her full quota. If you can go, communicate with Mrs. Williams, state president.

Winding the White Ribbon.

The 14th triennial convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held in Toronto, Canada, June 3 to 10, 1931, the president, Miss Anna Gordon, of the U. S. A., has announced.

In the latest issue of the Indian Temperance News, official organ of the India W. C. T. U., is an article on "India and Prohibition" by Ann Narayan Gadre, holder of the Frances Willard scholarship in Isabella Thoburn college, Lucknow, India. In it she says: "The outcery against drink in India is growing louder and more insistent. Politicians of every shade and organizations of most diverse character are crying themselves hoarse for prohibition, for it is only through prohibition that the government can deal promptly and radically with the drink question."

Mayor Howgate and Mrs. Howgate, of Retford, are total abstainers. Mrs. Howgate is the president of the workshop branch of the British Woman's Total Abstinence Union.

Mrs. Andrea Bonnichsen, president of the Denmark W. C. T. U., reports 600 members in her country making an active effort to secure new members.

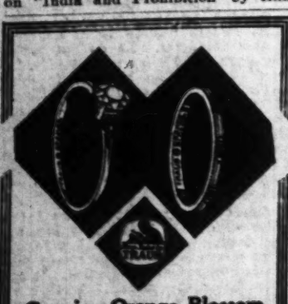

The recent riot in Durban, South Africa, was a result of the natives trying by every fair means to get drink houses closed but the white people who were making money on them would not allow it. Finally in desperation the natives started boycottong these saloons and the result was a pitched battle.

Progress in Korea.

At the recent quadrennial Sunday school convention in Pyeng-yang, perhaps the largest Christian gathering held in the Far East, Cordeli Erwin Hirst, of the Korea mission, presented the following resolution which was passed: "Inasmuch as the alcoholic content of sake, beer and other liquors, as proved by all scientific experimentation, is poisonous, habit-forming, and therefore injurious to the human body, be it resolved that we, the National Sunday School Association of Korea now in session in Pyeng-yang, respectfully request the minister of education to forbid the practice of teachers drinking on school premises." Temperance organizations are being formed and Korean temperance literature is bringing good results. "The number of anti-alcohol societies last year was 1,658, with 200,000 members, while in 1927 it was only 579," wrote Mr. Shozo Awoki, leader of the Awoki Temperance Reform Foundation of Japan. "The local option system is found in Japan," he continued. "There are at present about 40 villages that totally prohibit the selling or drinking of sake, and their number is increasing."

All establishments holding liquor licenses in Mexico were forbidden to sell alcoholic drinks May Day, this including saloons, dance halls and restaurants. Thousands of workers paraded during the day in orderly demonstrations.

Dr. David Ostlund, representative of the World League Against Alcoholism in northern Europe, says, "At present the prohibition law seems to have a stronger position than ever. The parliament of Finland has declared with finality that the law shall stand and shall be enforced. Poland is organizing national prohibition weeks under its ministry of education. The purpose of these weeks is educational to teach sobriety and instruct the people in exercise of the right of local option recently granted.

Atlantans Are Attendants In Lovely Columbus Wedding

COLUMBUS, Ga., May 31.—Of interest throughout the state was the wedding of Miss Marjorie Cargill and Lawrence Petri, which was solemnized Tuesday evening at the home of the bride's parents. Mr. and Mrs. John Ralston Cargill. Dr. Edmund F. Cook, of Macon, performed the ceremony.

The lower floor of the old colonial home was beautiful with its decorations of spring flowers. An altar of white satin veiled in asparagus fern was arranged in the drawing room against a background of river ferns and palms. Tall baskets held clusters of Easter lilies and yucca blooms, and a soft light from myriads of ivory tapers cast a glow over the scene.

The ushers, Joseph Emerson Boston, of Atlanta; William Ware, John Cozart, James Huff, Dimon Woodruff and Jack Somers entered in pairs and took their places about the altar. The bridesmaids, Miss Alice Harrold, of Americus; Mrs. Joseph Emerson Boston, Jr., of Atlanta; Mrs. Joseph Neal Franklin, of Lumpkin, and Miss Mary Flournoy, wore exquisite gowns of turquoise blue net made with short waist, tiny puff sleeves and long full skirts. Completing their costumes were blue lace mits, blue slippers and arm bouquets of pink peonies.

The matron of honor, Mrs. Samuel Whitsett Coney, sister of the bride, was similarly gowned. Miss Louisa Cargill was her sister's maid of honor. Her dress was of pink net made along the same lines as those worn by the maids, and she carried an arm bouquet of deep rose peonies.

Preceding the bride were her twin cousins, little Misses Martha and Mary Cargill. Their costumes were quaint frocks of blue ruffled net and they carried baskets of rose petals. The bride, given in marriage by her father, J. Ralston Cargill, was met at the altar by the groom and his best man, Warner Neal. The bride wore a gown of ivory satin made along princess lines, with rose point lace, that was used on her mother's wedding gown, and seed pearls forming the decorations. Her tulle veil was caught with orange blossoms and ropes of seed pearls. She wore a platinum and diamond pin, the gift of the groom, and carried a real lace handkerchief, which had been used in the weddings of the groom's grandmother, Mrs. Burrus, and mother, Mrs. Theodore Petri.

Following the ceremony a reception was held and later in the evening Mr. and Mrs. Petri left for a wedding trip through the mountains of North Carolina and Tennessee.

Parties Assemble At Driving Club.

The terrace of the Piedmont Driving Club was the scene last evening of the dinner-dance which assembles congenial parties of Atlantans and their guests. Mrs. J. H. Loudon, of Minneapolis, Minn., was the honor guest in the party given by Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Butters, whom she is visiting.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles T. Nunnally entertained a party, honoring Frank McGovern and Dr. William Durdine, both of New York city.

Mr. and Mrs. William L. Plummer and C. B. Blakeman were among the others who entertained parties at the club Saturday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Burnett Honor Daughter.

Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Burnett entertained at a dance at their home on Peachtree road in compliment to their daughter, Miss Martha Burnett. This informal affair was a neighborhood party for 20 school friends of the honor guest, who often have little informal swimming parties, matinees and other social gatherings.

Mrs. Slaton To Honor Mrs. Bun Wylie.

Mrs. John M. Slaton entertains at luncheon Tuesday, June 3, at Wingfield, her home on Peachtree road, in compliment to Mrs. Bun Wylie, regent of Georgia division, D. A. R., one of the most prominent women in the state.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones Attend Festivities.

Interesting stories have drifted back from England concerning Mr. and Mrs. Bobby Jones. During the week-end of May 17, they visited Lord Sassories at his age-old castle about 15 miles from London, a private golf course being maintained on the magnificent estate, which also boasts of indescribably beautiful gardens. At luncheon Sunday, May 18, Mrs. Jones found the bonny Prince of Wales seated on her left, with the Duke of York lunching at her right, with a goodly company of British nobility making up the personnel of the luncheon party. Afterward Mrs. Jones took moving pictures of her famous husband, the king of golf, playing with the Prince of Wales and his brother, the Duke of York. The films will be brought to Atlanta and kept as souvenirs for little Clara Jones and Bobby Jones III, so that when they reach an appreciable age these children will view their father golfing with the future King of England.

Douglas Fairbanks, officially proclaimed in the United States as the king of Hollywood, Cal., who sailed for England on the steamer Mauretania with Mr. and Mrs. Jones, was host at a brilliant dinner in London to 40 guests. Favors for the Walker cup defenders, Bobby Jones, Jimmie Johnson and George Von Elm, were gold watches and fobs, while their charming wives were presented handsome handbags by the genial host. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas B. Paine, Mr. and Mrs. Sherwood Hurt, of Atlanta, and Mrs. James Cross, of Marietta, Ohio, who also went abroad on the Mauretania in Mr. and Mrs. Jones' party, attended the dinner. Mrs. Cross visited here last winter, and was a popular figure at the masquerade ball, given by the Nine O'Clocks at the Piedmont Driving Club, being a cousin of Mr. and Mrs. Jones.

Although ever victorious on the golf links, having been lauded to the skies through the press for his prowess in the game, thinks nothing of hobnobbing with royalty and commands international admiration, Bobby Jones, Atlanta's most illustrious and beloved son, and his lovely young wife, the former Miss Mary Malone, remain ever-gracious and totally unspoiled by the adulation showered upon them.

Miss Barbara Eskrigge To Wed Mr. Young.

Social interest centers in the announcement of the engagement of Miss Barbara Eskrigge, of New Orleans, La., to John Livingston Hopkins, formerly of Atlanta, but residing in New Orleans at present.

The bride-elect, a beautiful young woman, belongs to the socially prominent set in New Orleans, and is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert B. Eskrigge. She was graduated from Sophie Newcomb college, and has enjoyed the cultural advantages of travel, having been abroad several times.

Mr. Young is a son of Mrs. Mary Howell Young, and a great-grandson of the late Judge John Livingston Hopkins, whose name he bears. He was graduated from the Georgia School of Technology, and is a member of the Chi Phi fraternity. He and his charming bride-elect have known one another since childhood, as Mr. and Mrs. Eskrigge and Mrs. Young have maintained summer homes at Highlands, N. C., for many years. Their marriage will in all probability be solemnized at Highlands in the late summer.

Mr. Hickey's Poem Appears in Harpers.

Among the most exquisite of Daniel Whitehead Hickey's poems, entitled "Who Pilots Ships," appears in the June issue of Harpers Bazar, featured in a most artistic manner, and headed by the drawing of a graceful ship, posed upon a calm sea. Mr. Hickey is nationally famous as a poet, and is a singer of the sweetest of songs. He has won many coveted prizes and awards for his remarkable poems, and is deserving of the highest praise, being indeed a credit to Atlanta. The poem follows:

Who pilots ships knows all a heart can know
Of beauty, and his eyes can close in death
And be content. There is no wind to blow
Whiter than foam-white wind, and no wind's breath
Sweeter than tropic wind. There is no star
That throbs with cold white fire as North stars do;
There is no moon path lovelier than the far
Path burning on the sea when dusk is blue.

There is no rain so swift as rain that flies
In bright battalions with a storm begun,
No song that shakes the soul like amber cries
Of gulls with wings turned yellow in the sun.
Who pilots ships, when life's last heartbeats stop,
Has drained the cup of beauty drop by drop.

Milady's Chapeau Featured at Party.

One of the most attractive and unique parties of the spring season was the luncheon given yesterday by Miss Jaqulin Moore at her home on Eleventh street in honor of Miss Marion Bryan, feted bride-elect of June.

Every favor and decoration of the luncheon accentuated the chapeau idea, even to the tiniest details. The centerpiece was a large picture hat of pink horsehair, upturned and holding colorful garden flowers. Lovely calla lilies, larkspur and baby's breath fell gracefully from the hat and traced their dainty way among the fernery between the handsome filet lace runners on the table. The salad was served on tiny hats of the pink horsehair, ordered especially from New York and mints and nuts were also in the hat containers. The salad, molded in the shape of a pink rose, formed the decoration for the hat and a dainty leaf of green lettuce made it look most realistic. Even the ice course was molded in the bonnet shape and the individual cakes were hats trimmed with pastel shaded flowers—in icing, of course. Exquisite hand-painted place cards represented the bridesmaids in large picture hats. All in all, it was one of the loveliest and most original parties of the spring season.

Miss Bryan took this opportunity of presenting to her attendants her gifts which were exquisite rhinestone buckles. Guests, including only the wedding party, were: Misses Marion, May and Florence Bryan, Cornelia Orme, Hannah Sterne, Laura Hoke, Sarah Adair, Elizabeth Spalding, Eugenia Coleman, of Macon; Belle Bryan and Virginia McCabe, of Richmond, Va.

Members of Coleman-Paris Wedding Party and Beautiful Bride

Attendants in the wedding of Miss Edythe Coleman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Coleman, and Ralph Paris, are pictured above. The wedding was a brilliant social event of Wednesday afternoon, May 28, taking place at the new First Baptist church on Peachtree street. The groomsmen, from left to right, are: Victor M. Covington, Jacksonville, Fla.; Cannon Young and Robert Scott; the bridesmaids, from left to right, are: Miss Mary Jane Hill, of LaGrange; Helena Hermance, of Miami, maid of honor; Ida Sadler, Ethel Hunter, Ellen Newell and Margaret Stovall. The groomsmen on the right are: Barmore Gambrell, E. Rhyne Cannon, Jr., of Charlotte, and Richard A. Cannon, best man. The little ringbearers, from left to right, are: Trenton Tunnell, Jr., and Bob Scott, Jr., and the little flower girl is Jean Lowe, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lowe, of Hartwell. At the lower right is Mrs. Paris, the beautiful young bride, who as Miss Coleman, was one of the belles and beauties of Atlanta society. Photographs by Thurston Hatcher.

Luncheon Tables Win Blue Ribbons.

Conspicuous among the exquisite exhibits displayed in the interclub competitive class at the Peachtree Garden Club flower show Thursday, at the Piedmont Driving Club were the luncheon tables set for four. First prize for arrangement was awarded Habersham Garden Club, of which Mrs. Luther Losser is president, with Mrs. John Fitts, the chairman, arranged the table, covered with a cloth of Javanese linen, showing hand-drawn design. An antique wedgewood bowl held pink larkspur and pink poppies, while handsome antique wedgewood service plates held the salad plates. Two were in blue and two in pink, centered with raised fruits, centered by old-fashioned custard cups of white, decorated with tiny pastel-tinted china flowers. Dainty old-fashioned nosegays of yellow jasmine, blue delphinium and sweetheart roses were used as place cards.

The table, sponsored by Druid Hills Garden Club, Mrs. Arthur Tufts, president; Mrs. Charles LeRoux, chairman, featured the colors of blue and yellow and was awarded second prize. Cream wedgewood plates were arranged on the point Viennese runner and held yellow crystal salad plates, holding fluted grapefruit. Yellow roses and blue delphinium were arranged in a mellow bowl of yellow crystal, and yellow crystal candlesticks held blue tapers.

The hunt luncheon table, original in conception and design, was awarded third place. It was exhibited by the Iris Garden Club, Mrs. William Akers, president. The excitement of the fox hunt and thrill of following the hounds was keenly felt and executed by this exhibit. One could clearly visualize the chattering guests seated around the cream-colored cloth embroidered with red dots, and scalloped in red. Centering the table was a red bowl of Bohemian glass holding the feathery blue love-in-a-mist and Indian brush. The crystal service, that is ice teas, fruit compotes and goblets, were in the Bohemian glass and the salad plates were blue, hand-painted in hunting scenes. Place cards were groups of dogs and red coated hunters astride their mounts. It was so realistic one seemed to faintly hear the echoes of the blasts of the horn.

Prize for the economy table was won by the Perennial Garden Club, Mrs. J. R. Bachman, president; Mrs. Hoyt Sutton, chairman. The very word economy suggests stinting, but it was most hard to recognize it in this attractive table with its bright green cover and matching napkins. True, they were paper, but they formed such a cheery background for the black and green crystal service. Two black bowls held yellow blossoms and between them were mint dishes in green.

Mrs. Charles E. Sciple was chairman for the Peachtree Garden Club for tabld arrangements, and members of her committee were Mesdames Charles Sisson, James D. Robinson, Frank Ellis, E. P. McBurney. Under the general chairmanship of Mrs. Hunter Perry the show was a pleasing success, every feature being a striking example of the horticultural ability of flower lovers.

Miss Emily Malone Fetes Miss Brownlee.

Miss Sara Law Honors Miss Rogers.

Miss Sara Law was hostess Friday at 1 o'clock at a beautiful luncheon at the Piedmont Driving Club in compliment to Miss Martha Worth Rogers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Worth Rogers, whose engagement is announced today to Buster Kilpatrick. The party was given to Miss Rogers as an announcement party, and the guests were told of the betrothal by the raising of a large white bell in the center of the table, which held under it a miniature bride and representing "Pat," as Miss Rogers is known to her many friends and "Buster." Around the bell was a mound of white orchids and other white flowers, forming an exquisite table decoration. The table was covered with a real lace cloth, and the entire color scheme was carried out in green and white. Lighted white tapers were placed at intervals around the table.

Miss Law was assisted in entertaining by her mother, Mrs. T. C. Law. The guests included Misses Rogers, Frances Barnett, Frances Howard, Augusta Porter, Margaret Kelley, Elsie Prater, Margaret Tate, Catherine Norcross, Myra Boynton, Peggy Poindexter, Marion Wolff, Helena Callaway, Kay Shaw, of Denver; Boyce Lokey, Esther Garrett and Lena Knox.

Miss Muriel Turner To Be Honored.

Mrs. Howell succeeds Mrs. John Knox as president, her term of office being one year, as prescribed by the constitution of the national organization.

Miss Netta Russell And Joe Henry Singer Are Wed

The marriage of Miss Netta Gadsden Russell, daughter of Mrs. Ethel Allen Russell, and Joe Henry Singer, son of Mrs. H. L. Singer, was beautifully solemnized last evening at 8 o'clock at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Daniel, uncle and aunt of the bridegroom, on Peachtree road. Dr. Fraser Patterson performed the ceremony before an assemblage of two families and intimate friends.

Preceding and during the ceremony an appropriate program of nuptial music was rendered by Miss Verdery Rosenbusch, violinist, accompanied by Miss Grace Nance, pianist.

Beautiful Decorations.

The reception rooms of the lovely home were thrown en suite for the occasion and a profusion of spring flowers in pastel shades were used in artistic arrangement which lent added charm to the scene.

An improvised altar at the far end of the living room, before which the nuptial vows were taken, was banked with stately palms and ferns. Tall pedestal baskets of lilies were placed at either end of the altar and seven-branched candelabra holding white unshaded tapers were placed at artistic intervals.

Miss Julia Van Ormer was maid of honor and was the first to enter. She wore a gown of orchid chiffon made along the fashionable princess lines. She carried a Dresden bouquet of spring flowers. Miss Dorothy Westbrook was the bridesmaid and was gowned in pale green chiffon made along the same lines as the gown worn by the maid of honor. She also carried a Dresden bouquet of spring flowers.

Thomas T. Daniel, Jr., acted as groomsman.

Entering with her grandfather, Colonel Jewell Allin, of Chattanooga, by whom she was given in marriage, the bride was met at the altar by the bridegroom and his brother, William Singer, who acted as best man.

Mother's Wedding Gown.

The exquisite blond beauty of the bride was further accentuated by her wedding gown of lace along princess lines with tiny puff sleeves, which was worn by her mother when, as Miss Ethel Allin, she became the bride of Robert Shand Russell. Her lovely tulle veil was caught to her hair in cap effect with a spray of orange blossoms, which were worn by the bridegroom's aunts, Mrs. Thomas H. Daniel and Mrs. George Tigner. Her flowers were calla lilies.

After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Daniel were hosts at a small reception. Assisting in entertaining were Mrs. Ethel Allin Russell, mother of the bride, and Mrs. H. L. Singer and Mrs. George Tigner, mother and aunt of the bridegroom.

Mrs. Russell was a lovely figure in a blue chiffon model. Her flowers were a shoulder corsage of Ophelia roses.

Mrs. Singer was a handsome figure in black chiffon combined with lace. Her flowers were orchids.

Mrs. Daniel was modishly gowned in cream lace made along princess lines. She wore a corsage of gardenias.

Childs' Home To Benefit From Party

Among the charitable institutions of Atlanta, one of the most constructive is that of the Atlanta Childs' Home on Hightower road, conducted for the purpose of caring for babies up to the age of five years, and a special effort is made to keep mother and child together. When possible, a mother is taken in the home with her baby and allowed to earn her board by helping care for the babies, and in time, the family relations are established in a great many cases. Great good in numerous cases has come to the community by this method, as the home will ever be the firm foundation for prosperity and happiness.

The Atlanta Childs' Home, like the many other charity institutions of this city, receives valuable aid from the Community Chest, but depends largely upon the efforts of a number of splendid women who work for the babies in circles. For instance, the vacant chair circle takes the responsibility of caring for the hospital of the home; another circle comes out to the home one day out of each week and sews for the babies; another circle of ladies mend and patch the clothes, sheets, stockings, etc. It is most interesting what these fine women accomplish for these little helpless children. At the present time the home is badly in need of paint and screens. All the circles, together with Miss Bess Langhorne, chairman, and Mrs. Jester as co-chairman, will give an elaborate bridge party at the Shrine mosque on Friday afternoon, June 6, at 2:30 o'clock. Each table will give a lovely prize, and several handsome prizes which have been donated will be given away. Reservations can be made by calling the Atlanta Childs' Home office, Dearborn 4180, or the Carolinas Gift Shop, 1027 Peachtree street, phone Hemlock 1013. Price of tickets, 50 cents each.

At 4 o'clock the Harbour-Sharp School of Dancing will present an artistic program. Miss Harbour and Miss Sharp for five years were assistant instructors at the Spiker School of Dancing and now have their own studio. Miss Sharp and Miss Harbour follow the well-known Kosloff method in their ballet work, and in this entertainment given for the benefit of the babies of the Atlanta Childs' Home.

John Ruskin Sees Root of Heresy.

"I believe," writes John Ruskin, "that the root of every schism and heresy from which the Christian church has suffered has been the effort to earn salvation rather than to receive it; and that one reason why preaching at times is so ineffective is because it calls on men oftener to work for God than to behold God working for them."

THREE DISTRICT RALLIES ARE HELD.

Three Baptist district rallies of the W. M. U. of the Atlanta association of unusual interest were held last week according to announcement at the Avondale, First and Grant Park Baptist churches. Mrs. W. O. Mitchell, secretary of the eighth district, presided at Avondale Tuesday, May 27. Besides the inspirational addresses by Mrs. A. T. McMahon, secretary-treasurer of W. M. U. of Georgia, and Mrs. Wilbur Jones, superintendent of W. M. U. Atlanta, the outstanding feature of the occasion was the taking of an offering of over $100 to add to the building fund of the new Kate Pendleton Davison good will center, which is to be located at an early date in the vicinity of the old building on Stewart avenue.

Baptist women of each of the eight districts of Atlanta are intensely interested in the plans for the new building and funds are being earnestly solicited so that work on the project may be begun in the near future. Much credit is due the assistant superintendents of the W. M. U. Atlanta association, Mrs. Norman Pool and Mrs. A. G. Sullivan, because of the presentation of the pageant, "Seeing the Unseen in W. M. U." at the eighth and first district rallies.

Jones, presided, and tables placed on the terrace overlooking the lake were beautifully decorated with flowers donated by Mrs. W. B. Duval. P.-T. A. President Gives Summary of National Congress

Mrs. R. H. Hankinson, president of Georgia Congress of Parents and Teachers, sends the following message: National Congress of Parents and Teachers has once again concluded an annual convention. The inspiring mountain setting of Denver, Colo., has pitality of the local parent-teachers and Denver officials and residents, the fine program and the enthusiasm of the delegates from the 48 states and Alaska were many reasons for the success of the meeting. The outstanding impression left by the convention is the seriousness of purpose of the great group of men and women gathered from all corners of the nation, working without money and without price for the advancement of the children of the world.

Emphasis of the convention centered around parental education. The problem of education, as presented at this great conference, is the extension of technical training into the home. The parent-education program was offered as a solution of this problem.

Features of Interest.

Among the features of interest were the Gold Star dinner, honoring the states best projecting the Child Welfare Magazine, the publication offered by the national organization for instruction in parent-teacher work; the presentation of methods for extension of libraries in the open country, the home and the school; the plans for juvenile protection, particularly as related to commercialized amusements; the methods for safety, as illustrated by school-boy patrols; recreation programs for grownups and children; the summer roundup and other health programs; the opportunity school and its relation to parents, and the fathers' council.

The presence of the director of the White House conference on child health and protection linked up the meeting with the program of the national government.

Mother Singers.

Mother singers from the many states, united in one magnificent chorus, were an inspiring feature of an evening session. Pageantry, stunts, banquets, mountain rides, friendships made and renewed, classes in social hygiene, program-making, publicity, displays of publications relating to the seven objectives of education, year books and scrap books from the states, sponsors making every gesture of hospitality, were all a part of a week of pleasure and instruction, conducive to greater definiteness of purpose and determination of effort on the part of every one privileged to attend.

Georgia Activities.

All of this, translated into Georgia activities, creates greater interest in the coming institute to be held at the University of Georgia June 23, 24 and 25. These dates have been set to run coincident with the meeting of the county superintendents of the state.

Hotels are offering special rates to those attending the institute. County superintendents and local associations are being given opportunity through this institute to come into better understanding of the ideals of the Congress of Parents and Teachers and of the proper functioning of the local units.

Mrs. John T. Fisher, state president of the Tennessee congress, of Memphis, Tenn., and Mrs. J. B. Moody, a member of the publicity committee of the national, congress, will be present and lend support to the institute.

Outdoor Civic League Holds Second Meeting.

Atlanta Outdoor Civic league held its second meeting last Friday at the Piedmont Driving Club with Mrs. Robert L. Cooney, acting as chairman pro tem. Interest is being manifested in this organization which is as yet in its infancy and it is the purpose to interest every citizen of Greater Atlanta in this most worthwhile undertaking. To this end, it is planned to open a temporary office at some convenient location downtown where the plans of the league may be explained and members enrolled. Full details concerning this membership drive will be published at a later date.

Meanwhile it is suggested by the league that each individual citizen may do his part toward making Atlanta the "City Beautiful of the Southeast." Is your little plot of grass down next to the sidewalk neatly cut? Are there any weeds choking the gutters? Have you somewhere a vacant lot which is an eyesore to somebody living nearby? Are you planning a picnic? Please remember to gather up all unsightly papers before you start back home.

The following excerpt is from a letter received by the Outdoor Civic league from Professor Sutton of the Atlanta schools: "I deeply appreciate your call this morning concerning the organization of the Outdoor Civic league which is to continue the work so splendidly begun by the woman's division of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce on 'Paint-up, Clean-up and Plant-up.' You are certainly taking a step in the right direction for an all year 'round organization and effort towards making Atlanta a clean, attractive, healthful and beautiful city. I wish to pledge you the co-operation of the public school department and of my own individual efforts in trying to see that Atlanta is made a completely sanitary, healthful and beautiful city. I shall inform the children concerning this organization, and will write the Parent-Teacher Association about it and ask their co-operation and help. We pledge you our assistance."

The next meeting of the Outdoor Civic league will be held on the fourth Thursday in June, June 26 is the date, at 3 o'clock at the Piedmont Driving Club. Everybody interested in this project is cordially invited to attend. Mesdames M. D. Norton, Charles Orme and J. L. Riley form the committee on publicity for the Outdoor Civic league.

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

SUNDAY JUNE 1, 1930

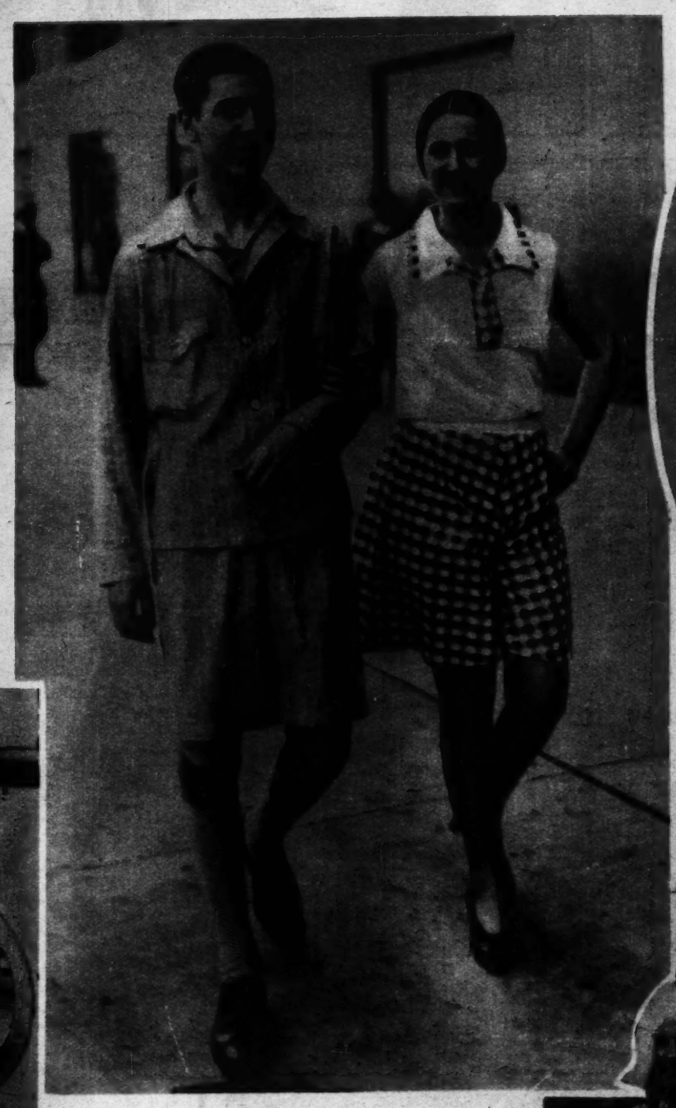

ADMIRAL RICHARD E. BYRD knows how to appreciate the warm sunshine after two years spent in the ice fields at the south pole. He is shown at Ancon, C. Z., en route to the United States. —(Associated Press.)

A COURT OF BEAUTY —Miss Frances Clarke, queen of the Washington seminary May festival, is shown surrounded by the ladies and pages of her regal court.

"HEY — OPERATOR, GIMME THE ZOO" — "Gilmore" just doesn't know what's wrong with the service these days. He's thinking of giving the operator a lion-like bawling out. "Gilmore," incidentally, is the aviator-companion of Captain Roscoe Turner, who recently failed by a small margin of beating Colonel Lindbergh's cross-country record. Captain Turner is a frequent visitor to Atlanta.

TO SPEND SUMMER IN FRANCE—Mrs. Gartrell Holsenbeck, prominent young Atlanta matron, who will sail this week for France, where she will spend the summer touring Europe and visiting her parents near Paris.—(Bill Mason.)

HERE'S ONE SECOND-HAND CAR THAT'S VALUABLE—This vehicle, now carefully preserved in the Vienna museum, was one of the earliest models built by Siegfried Marcus, first to use a gasoline-driven motor in an automobile. It was constructed in 1875.

OH, DEARIE ME, KNEE PANTIES—Knee panties for both men and women—that's what the stylists decree. Frank Collins and Gladys Young courageously displayed their suits along Michigan boulevard in Chicago.

"WATTA' MAN, WATTA' MAN!"—According to the votes of the senior class at Princeton University this man is about all there is. He is B. V. D. Hedges, of Plainfield, N. J. The honors his classmates heaped on his shoulders include: Most respected man, most thorough gentleman, most popular, done most for the class, best physical build, biggest politician, second best all around man, second best all around athelte and third busiest in the senior class.—(Associated Press.)

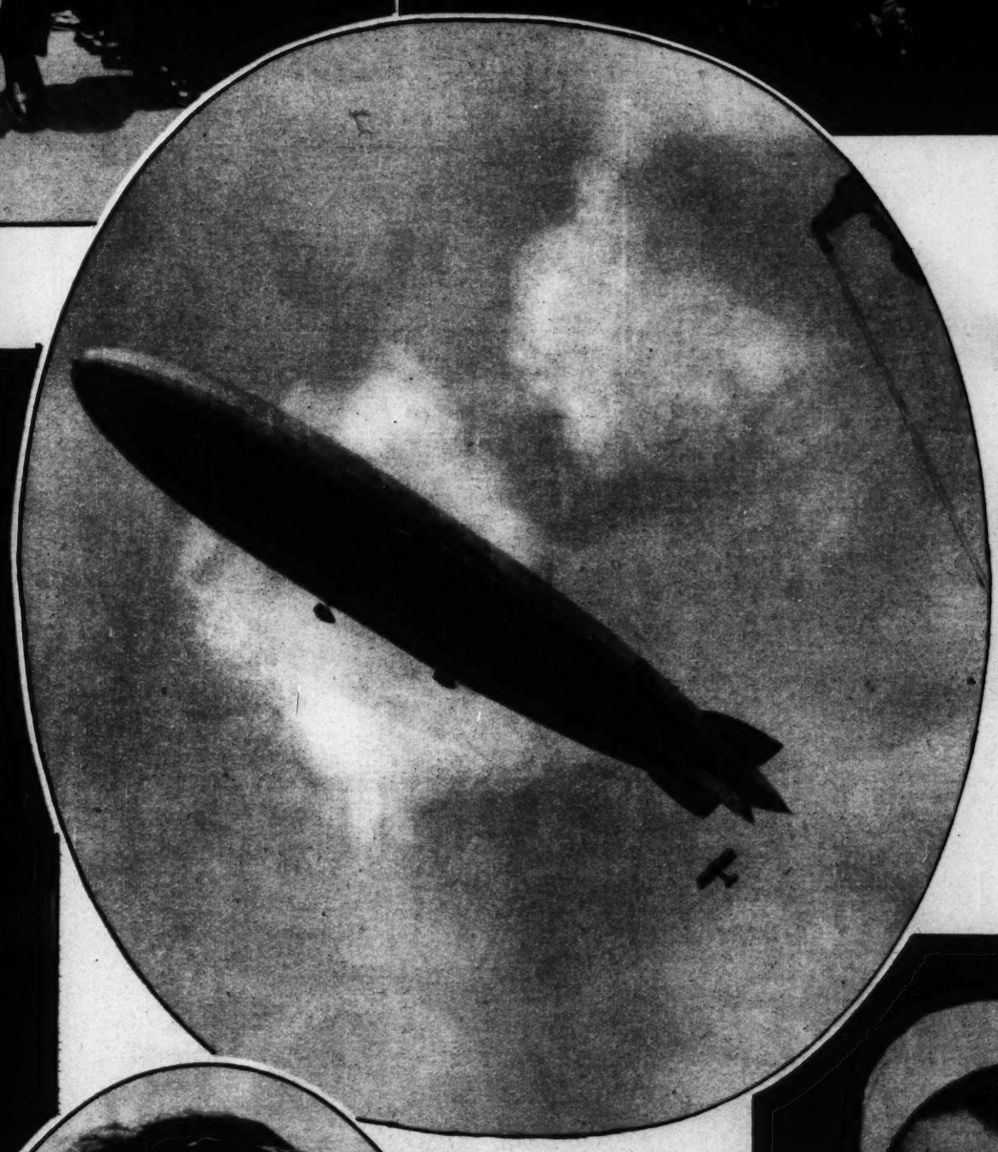

FORM—Bobby Jones, peer of the world's golfers, driving from the third tee of the Sandwich, England, links, during the Walker cup matches, which were won by America, 10 points to 2.

PRESIDENT HOOVER INSPECTS NEWEST OF TREATY CRUISERS—President Hoover, with Captain F. L. Oliver, inspecting the personnel of the eight-inch gun cruiser Salt Lake City during the massed fleet maneuvers off the Virginia Capes. The cruiser served as the reviewing stand for the Commander-in-Chief of the navy. (Associated Press)

NEW PORTRAIT OF MAYOR I. N. RAGSDALE — This striking portrait, done in oils by Mrs. Emma Scott Jennings, was a gift to the mayor from employes of the city government. It will be hung in Atlanta's new city hall.

WHAT WOULD HAVE HAPPENDED IF HE HAD BEEN WELL?—Albert Ladlow, of London, who had been undergoing medical treatment for months, attempting to shake a policeman from the ladder raised to the roof on which Ladlow held scores of police and firemen at bay for three hours. When one policeman succeeded in reaching the roof, Ladlow kicked him unconscious. Ladlow finally slipped off the roof and fell, to the ground, senseless.

(Right)
VIVA LA FRANCE!—Miss Gina Malo, popular Parisian stage star, arrived recently to take the leading role in an American production.

For The JUNE BRIDE

(Left)

(Right)

THIS LOVELY BRIDE wears lace over a white satin slip. The full skirt falls straight to the floor from quaint panniers. The lace collar edged with tulle ties softly and demurely at one side. A Juliet cap ornamented with tiny seed pearls secures the tulle veil.

(Left)

(Right)
THE TRAVEL COAT of smart simplicity, with tabbed cuffs, a pert bow at the back of the collar and a narrow belt tying at the natural waistline for chic detail.

THIS GAY YOUNG FROCK is of canton crepe of Bemberg with its bright flower motif in crimson and green.

(Left)
EXQUISITE black lace of Bemberg fashions a charming supper frock, ornamented only by a glittering buckle at the waistline.

HERE IS A PHOTOGRAPHER LOOKING FOR A FUTURE— The cameraman shoots what he sees in a crystal ball. Maybe he sees what cameramen will look like in the future—if, as they say, you can really see your future in a crystal ball. Anyway, it was a weird sight, as photo shows.—(Associated Press.)

It's a Cool Cool World

Giving it your cool consideration, what is more pleasing with the longer, fitted silhouette than the "off-the-ankle" simplicity of the opera? And, this summer, affording contrast to suntan complexions, what but a white opera has such a cool claim to chic? The RIO REGENT is shown in white kid. $10.

THIS SEASIDE EDEN FOR GOLFERS
--- GIVES NEW GUSTO TO YOUR GAME

Once in a blue moon—but not oftener—you'll find a thrill that compares with golf at Sea Island Beach. Fairways are close-cropped as the nap on velvet .... grass greens, beyond their white-faced traps, are true as billiard tables. Sea-cool, sea-moist air soothes your nerves and sweetens the turf. Unless the lovely prospect all about you lures your eye from the ball, you'll lop five strokes from your game the first time out .... while breezes sailing straight from Spain play in your hair and caress your carefree brow. But wait! Stretches of hard-packed beach invite bathing in a gentle surf. There's a fresh water swimming pool, commodiously appointed .... tennis .... riding over thirty miles of leaf-hung bridle paths .... deep-sea fishing .... archery .... every fascinating outdoor sport to garnish gorgeous summer days. Dancing .... teas .... bridge .... friendly, informal companionship. Eye-filling beauty brings balm to relaxation. There's yachting and sailing over the limitless blue of the Atlantic—through winding inland waterways bordered by tropical growth—huge, gray-bearded liveoaks—breeze-drenched, moon-lit nights. Children are honored guests at Sea Island Beach. A special pavilion for their use—a section of beach reserved for them—these are just part of the many provisions made for their safety and amusement. The Hotel Cloister, most beautiful of resort hotels, is famous for its cuisine and service. A charming cottage community offers attractively furnished cottages at moderate rates with or without hotel service. In fact all the luxury and attractions of the most fashionable Northern resorts are quickly available for you here. One day's ride by motor and one night by Pullman. Special summer rates at The Cloister are lower than any other resort of equal character on the Atlantic Coast. Rates $8.00 per day single, $50.00 per week including all meals. Every room with bath.

Trade Follows the Dollar

By Francis H. Sisson

Vice-President of the Guaranty Trust Company of New York

GRADUALLY the idea is being forced upon American consciousness that the problem of foreign trade is a two-sided affair: that the party of the first part and the party of the second part both have interests which must be served, and that only as mutual advantage is furthered can profitable relations be maintained. This readjustment in viewpoint has come since the war as one of its many far-reaching consequences.

We have discovered that it is not enough for us to fall back on the negative policy of "live and let live;" that we must live and help live if we are to enjoy the fullness of life ourselves.

We have learned also that our rapidly increasing production of both raw materials and finished products must have outlet in foreign markets or we shall have stagnation at home; that the margin of our exports abroad is the margin of our profit at home.

We see daily illustration of the truth that we gain only as we give, and that no nation today liveth unto itself alone. This may sound like a lecture in morals, but in reality it is a hard lesson in economics which we are slowly learning.

The international banker, in arranging credits for foreign countries or industries, is serving American producers of all classes in the most direct and effective way. Foreign loans make business at home. Every dollar that goes abroad is an ambassador for American business.

The world's trade today is passing through the most severe and widespread depression since the great post-war deflation of 1921. In almost all the important commercial nations of the world, industrial activity is at a low ebb, unemployment is large, commodity prices have declined sharply and money rates have fallen, in many cases to abnormally low levels.

Yet, exceptional as the situation is, we find important differences between the positions of various countries. In some nations, particularly those which depend in large measure upon the fortunes of one commodity, conditions are very discouraging. In other cases, the recession in business has been comparatively mild. Again, some countries have been depressed for a considerable time and are now showing signs of recovery, while others appear to be still in the early stages of the reaction.

This variation in time and intensity between business fluctuations in different countries is one of the reasons why American business men are laying increasing emphasis on the importance of developing foreign outlets for their goods. Such outlets not only increase the total volume of their business, but stabilize it as well. When an impairment of purchasing power reduces sales in one country, better conditions in some other markets will prevent the slump from becoming as severe as it would if the volume of sales depended entirely on conditions within a narrower area.

Foreign trade returns, therefore, are being closely watched, particularly since last November, when the effects of general business recession, excessive absorption of capital for speculative purposes and declines in prices of commodities and securities became clearly evident in our export and import totals. The volume of our foreign commerce reached a peak in October, 1929, the total value of exports and imports in that month being one of the largest reported since the inflated totals of 1920. Since then the trend has been steadily downward, although the present level compares not unfavorably with those of several years in the recent past. It is only in comparison with the very high totals of last year that the current figures appear extremely low.

Nevertheless, the current decline in our foreign trade is rightly regarded as a highly significant feature of the general business situation, both here and abroad. In order to find its causes, we must go back beyond the stock market panic of last fall and beyond the recession in domestic business activity that began last summer. If we examine the trend of foreign financing, we find that last year the United States ceased to be a heavy exporter of long-term capital and became a heavy importer of short-term capital. This abrupt change in the international financial position of this country, which was due primarily to the absorption of foreign and domestic funds by our inflated stock market, was in turn the chief cause of the decline in our export trade.

This interrelationship between foreign finance and foreign trade, which at first glance appears rather complex, is really a very simple matter of arithmetic. It is best understood by considering foreign finance as merely one phase of foreign trade—a trade in securities. When we invest capital abroad we import stocks and bonds, and are thereby enabled to export commodities. In effect, foreign countries are importing our goods and are paying for them not in cash but in securities—that is, in their promises to pay at some future time.

Thus, if we consider foreign trade as a whole—as an exchange of goods, services, gold and securities—it becomes self-evident that, over a long period, our exports must equal our imports. For a short time there may be a discrepancy, which is reflected in bankers' international balances. But the balances which bankers require abroad in order to carry on their business are comparatively stable. If the actual balances rise greatly above the necessary level or decline much below it, the disparity between the supply of and demand for such balances produces fluctuations in exchange rates which result in gold shipments and otherwise discourage a continuance of the conditions that produced the disparity.

But to present a set of economic phenomena in mathematical terms is one thing, and to analyze the casual relationships between those terms is quite another. No one can disagree with the fundamental assertion that our balance of international payments must balance, because such an assertion is tantamount to saying that we must pay for what we get and must be paid for what we give. But the difficult questions of cause and effect remain. Every item in the balance of payments is more or less closely related to all the others, partly as cause and partly as effect.

For practical purposes the most useful point of departure is perhaps the change in international bank balances, since this item furnishes a yardstick by which bankers measure the flow of funds, and at the same time acts as a sort of governor or balance-wheel which, through its effects on foreign exchange rates and the movement of gold, most directly determines the flow of international payments. A credit or export item in the balance of payments is one that tends to increase the bank balances of Americans abroad or to decrease the balances of foreigners in American banks, and a debit or import item is one that tends to reduce the foreign bank balances of Americans or to increase the deposits of foreigners in banks in this country.

If credits are consistently larger than debits, our deposits in foreign banks increase and deposits of foreigners in our banks decline. Foreign exchange rates in this country accordingly fall, while dollar exchange in foreign markets rises to a premium. It becomes profitable for foreign banks to ship gold to the United States in order to build up their balances so as to sell more dollar exchange at the high rates, and for American banks to accept gold in payment of their excessive balances of low-priced foreign funds. Similar correctives operate simultaneously through fluctuations in money rates and, less promptly, through changes in commodity prices.

It is interesting to note how the balance of international payments of the United States has been maintained during the last decade, in the face of the abnormal conditions that have prevailed during this period. Estimates of the various items in the balance have been made since 1922. During the seven-year period from 1922 through 1928, the United States had a surplus of merchandise exports amounting to $4,008,000,000; our loans to foreign countries earned $4,335,000,000 in interest; and credit balances of foreigners in our banks increased $666,000,000.

These three net items, totaling $9,009,000,000, all represent amounts for which foreigners must have rendered an equivalent to us, in one form or another. This equivalent was paid, first, by a surplus of "invisible" imports—that is, by the rendering of miscellaneous services, such as the carriage of ocean freight, entertainment of our tourists abroad, etc.—amounting to $5,157,000,000; by the shipment of $249,000,000 in gold and currency; and by the delivery of $3,603,000,000 in stocks and bonds. Thus it appears that there has been not a credit balance, but a considerable debit balance, in the exchange of goods and services and that the funds for investment abroad have been supplied from the interest earned on previous foreign investments.

But we must be careful not to read unwarranted implications into the figures. It is no more accurate to say that our ability to expand our foreign investments has been solely due to our large receipts of interest from older investments than to say that it is due to our so-called "favorable" balance of trade in commodities. Nor can the casual relationship be regarded as operating entirely in the opposite direction, as is done by those who attribute our persistent surplus of merchandise exports over imports to the increase in our foreign investments. It is undoubtedly true that "trade follows the dollar"—that is, that foreign investments stimulate export trade; and also that an export trade balance facilitates the further expansion of loans abroad.

But both of these conditions are ultimately due to factors that lie quite outside the balance of payments—in the present instance, to the rapidly increasing productivity of American industry and the need of American capital in foreign countries. The World War resulted in the destruction of property and the disorganization of industry and finance in Europe. During the greater part of the last decade the principal task has been that of rehabilitation. Fortunately, America has been in a position to aid in performing this work by shipping huge quantities of commodities overseas and by lending to Europe the money with which to pay for them. It is idle to speculate as to whether we were able to ship the commodities because we had the money to lend, or whether we had the money to lend because we were able to ship the commodities. The two processes went hand in hand, and both were ultimately due to the fundamental economic conditions resulting largely from the war.

During 1928 and 1929 it became increasingly difficult to continue this selling-lending process because of the absorption of funds, both domestic and foreign, in our inflated stock market. Interest rates throughout the world rose to high levels; and in some countries of Europe, particularly those that had depended most largely on American capital, the shortage of funds became very acute. But, for the time being, the United States was in no position to supply the deficiency. For some months after this situation arose, our export trade remained at a high level, probably because Europe had, during the preceding period of easy money, borrowed more than enough to pay for current shipments of goods. But gradually the supply of dollar exchange abroad became depelted; foreign currencies sank to low levels in our market; and, for a time, gold was shipped to this country despite the shortage of funds in Europe.

This situation now appears to have been corrected. Foreign exchange rates have advanced, and interest rates throughout the world have moved downward. Credit conditions in the United States in the near future should be more inviting to foreign borrowers than they have been for some time. Just at present, the state of business is not such as to encourage large security flotations; but this is a passing phase. Europe will continue to need American capital, and America will continue to look to Europe as a field for investment and as a market for its products. In the very near future we are likely to witness a considerable movement of capital with the opening of the new Bank for International Settlements. This will take the form of an issue of about $200,000,000 in reparation annuity bonds, with a probable further issue of some $100,000,000 for the benefit of Germany.

These conditions will, in course of time, bring about a revival in our foreign trade, with benefits that will be apparent throughout our economic fabric. But they will require time to assert themselves. Just as the decline in American loans to foreign countries was followed only gradually by a decrease in our export trade, so the restoration of more normal and favorable financial conditions will be slow in producing a revival in our shipments of goods abroad.

These financial conditions, which are almost world-wide in their application, are accompanied by a variety of complications in many countries that ordinarily provide important markets for American goods. Several nations have recently conducted experiments in price control for their leading products, with most unfortunate results. In England, financial stability has been maintained, but apparently at the cost of industrial depression. Italy has also been struggling with the problems imposed by currency stabilization. Germany, which has depended more largely on American capital than any other European country, has recently encountered serious financial difficulties.

Brazil has been depressed by the decline in the price of coffee and the doubt that has arisen as to the future success of the governmentally sponsored defense program. Cuba has been similarly affected by the sugar situation. Argentina, concerned by the trend of her foreign trade and by large gold exports, closed the Caja de Conversion, the Argentine gold conversion office. Australia is contending with a difficult exchange situation. Political chaos has interfered with trade in China, though not so disastrously as might have been expected under the circumstances. Japan has passed through a critical financial period, aggravated by the effects of the earthquakes a few years ago. Mexico, Nicaragua and other Latin-American countries have been affected by political disturbances. In all nations having the silver standard, the recent drastic decline in the value of that metal to the lowest level on record has created difficulties. With this variety of obstacles to encounter, the immediate outlook for American foreign trade is clouded with many doubts. Looking into the more distant future we are justified in taking a much more optimistic view. We shall continue to have difficult problems to face; but if these are intelligently met we may be confident that the trend of our foreign trade will continue to respond to the influences making for expansion.

It must be recognized that the process whereby we have maintained our export trade balance in commodities in recent years cannot be continued indefinitely. We have been passing through an abnormal period which appears to be drawing to a close. We have just seen that the interest on our loans abroad has already increased to a point where it represents a large export item in our balance of payments. Last year it was not much smaller than our surplus of commodity exports. Every new foreign issue floated in this country temporarily stimulates our export trade, but ultimately it must increase the pressure upon us to receive foreign goods and services in payment of the interest due to us; and unless we can find a way to admit such goods and services without unduly restricting the market for our own prod-

Man's Indifference to the Boyish Type

BY TREVOR ROSSLYN.

Antagonism of Sexes, That Has Existed Ever Since the War When Women Adopted Short Skirts and Masculine Manners, Is to Be Overthrown Finally, Because Ladies—Bless 'Em—Have Keenly Felt the Lack of Romance in Their Lives

DOES a woman dress to please men?

Again, as a result of the new trend in styles, the question is very much to the fore, but from woman, most mysterious of all the mysteries, no answer is forthcoming.

It is, indeed, a question with a catch, and woman is not to be tricked into baring her soul that cynical man might enjoy a bit of laughter.

As to how or why she dresses is one of those matters which woman regards as her own business—a business which she intends to keep dark and mysterious until the end of time.

Lending more than passing interest, however, to the question is the charge that in fashion will be found the only clue to woman's mind.

The very sweepingness of the indictment, which had its origin in the pronounced trend towards feminism in woman's dress of the present day, has stirred up a lively row between psychologists, philosophers, philogynists, misogynists, feminists and anti-feminists. And while the controversy concerning woman's subconscious personality wages fast and furious, the couturiers of Paris and the silk-weavers of Lyons lean back in their easy-chairs and smile benignly, as they mutter and mumble to themselves:

"Sex! Sex! Sex is to blame for it all!"

Of course, the designers and creators of fashion have good reasons to rejoice, for have they not been acquitted of the charges of tyranny inflicted in the name of fashion?

Now, what's behind this revolution in women's fashions?

Before essaying an answer to thi question, which is almost as ticklish as the one that heads this discussion it's about time we got down to facts —psychological and historical facts that place the blame for bending the neck to fashion's yoke just where it belongs.

Woman Is Responsible.

Woman herself is responsible for the fashions of the present day.

There is probably nothing more important to the feminine mind than clothes, the psychology of which is little understood by women themselves.

All woman knows, or cares to know is that clothes are in themselves important as a lure. There is no use questioning the female as to the role played by fashion in her subconscious life, for, as Nietzsche well said, "From a woman you can learn nothing of woman." In fact, woman is not interested one whit in her own psychology. Of this much we are as sure as was Kant, who observed, "A woman does not betray her secret."

Even granting that woman was able to explain herself along psychological lines, the chances are she would refuse to lift the veil of mystery concerning fashion, for to her clothes have a love significance.

Once woman bares this side of her personality, the mystery which has attached itself to her through the ages will disappear. And once woman is shorn of mystery, she will lose her hold over man.

So when Fannie Hurst, most highly paid woman writer in the world, recently scored the "oligarchy of industry," as represented by the Worths, the Lanvins, the Chanels and the Molyneuxs of Paris, for foisting upon the female of the human species that abomination of old, the long skirt, she was simply talking through her novelistic bonnet.

Mere man—be he psychologist, philogynist or misogynist—refused, however, to accept Miss Hurst's explanation as to femininity's complete surrender to the overlords of fashion.

The brilliant novelist and eloquent champion of feminism may call upon every woman with any modernism or independence in her soul to revolt against the wearing of the awkward and unhealthy relics of tthe Victorian age, which make her unlovely and uncomfortable, for the sole benefit of "a few selfish dressmakers," but her crusade will be in vain.

Don't Dictate Fashions.

From what the writer knows of them, through a long residence in Paris, the overlords of the world of feminine fashion are a hardy and courageous lot. Certainly, there can be no questioning their business acumen. But in the matter of dictating what milady should or should not wear from one season to another, they play, in-

Long skirts of the newer evening dresses are making women more alluring, more feminine and much more attractive to men. Women have learned this, and short skirts are surely doomed.

There is not a male in this whole wide world, much less a Parisian, who is so rash, so defiant of danger, as to dictate to woman in matters of dress.

The dressmakers of the French capital do understand, however, the psychology of deed, a rather inconsequential role.

women's clothes. This knowledge they are able to turn to their own financial advantage, in which they are aided by the prudery of past centuries. And this explains why Paris enjoys an almost monopolistic control in the designing and creation of women's clothes. When American manufacturers begin delving deeply into the psychology of the clothes worn by milady, instead of devoting all of their talents and energies to mass production and standardization of product, then Paris will have cause to fear for her prestige as the style center of the world.

Thus it is possible, though not probable, that some day the world's fashion center will be located in New York, Boston or Chicago.

And how ridiculous it is to say that the "dictators of fashion" ordered skirts lowered because they wished to sell more silks and other textiles, when one recalls that these same Lanvins, Worths, Molyneuxs and Chanels were in power when skirts were ordered even with and above the patella.

Despite what the preachers and moralists may say about the short skirts and the exposure of the knees, this revolution in woman's fashions was not due to a ukase of the dressmaking czars of Paris, nor did femininity itself have anything to do with women taking to kilts. The adoption of the abbreviated skirt was a war measure. It was dictated not alone by the need for the conservation of textiles but to permit greater freedom of movement for those females who swarmed into industrial life during the World War.

And then, unfortunately for herself, woman foolishly got the idea into her head that through the short skirt—even trousers—the shingle, as well as other masculinities, man would prostrate himself at her feet and pay her tribute.

Sex Appeal.

But she blundered psychologically in thinking that the more she showed of herself the greater would be her appeal to men. Women thought that if they were dressing to please men, the simplest way would be to wear as little raiment as possible, without running afoul of the law. They failed to take into consideration a well-established psychological fact—that nothing enrages a man so much as a woman who is either too generous with, or too careless of her charms.

Through scanty and revealing attire, with a liberal display of her physical charms, woman thought man would accept her as a "delightfully daring" creature. Well, that was just another instance of blundering on the part of milady, for as Havelock Ellis and other authorities on the psychology of humanity have pointed out repeatedly that among primitive peoples, morality seems to be found in exactly inverse proportion to clothing.

That is to say, primitive peoples who wear practically nothing are highly moral. They regard love affairs as sacred, pure and as natural as breathing. Mates are almost invariably faithful to one another.

The seeking of power over man by woman, according to history, seems to have invariably been accompanied by increased covering up of the human body. For a period this truth seems to have escaped woman.

While the new freedom which was symbolized by short skirts and bobbed hair, gave woman a standing not enjoyed by her mother and grandmother, it certainly did nothing to solve the complex problems arising through the contact of the sexes. As an economic factor in a changing world she counted for something, but socially she failed to move forward. As a result we have been breeding a type of girl who is conspicuously deficient in the sense of racial function.

What Started Enmity.

And here is what happened—

Equipped with the philosophy of independence the girl sallied forth into the world. She grew older, she saw more of life, she came into contact with men, and then arrived the day when she realised with a shock that as a self-centered unit she could not truly fulfill her personality.

In her innermost self she felt the need for man and child. But in her greatest need she was inwardly bankrupt. She had been on a footing of "wholesome" comradeship with boys and young men, but that mating should be a thing needful to her self-fulfillment was to her a strange idea.

And she was to discover that most men resent strongly the independence of the modern girl, despite the fact that few of them have the nerve to protest against the customs of the day. And this resentment was not, as many feminists have said and still say, based upon male jealousy of the increasing power of women. It was something deeper than that.

Her masculinization, expressed most strikingly in dress, made it impossible for woman to give men just that element which was missing in man.

And what was man's reaction?

While the friendly companionship which was possible had its good side, it had also the serious drawback that the man missed in his life the influence of a specifically feminine element, with all that this meant for his emotional and mental life. The girls with whom he associated were so often masculinized in their tone that, although he may have been attracted to them, he was bound to miss the more spiritual aspects of femininity such as are to be found in the better types of the French and Italian girls.

Can Understand Men.

The more masculine a girl becomes the less she can intuitively comprehend masculine human nature. It is precisely the oppositeness which gives rise to the natural atmosphere of mutual attraction.

Surely, women were free and independent. But their freedom left them in a state of isolation. The old bonds binding them to the community and to the masculine half of humanity were severed.

And yet woman herself was to blame that so many men seemed to lack that essential vitality of spirit which has characterized all the great lovers of the past. Men lacked the possessive instinct because so many girls wished to be only a "good pal." Girls wished to be popular with all the boys. They wished to be the life of the party—they desired a form of communal worship. Their "It" was for all mankind.

As a result of this state of affairs woman was slowly but surely being "civilized" out of their natural instincts, and men, whose motto seemed to have been "peace at any price," were playing the farce through to a finish.

Happily, nature has a way of proving itself dominant in times of a social muddle. The fact that men were "passing them up" because of their pseudo-masculinism came as a shock, but it was a beneficent shock. There was a spiritual and romantic awakening. Woman's ideal of herself had to be changed, if she were still to exist as a social creature.

Woman saw the handwriting on the wall. If she were to regain her ancient prestige and sit once more upon a throne, she knew well that she would have to undergo a drastic metamorphosis. And a change of ideals in herself would bring about a change in man.

Man was now, after long years, going to be given something to catch—and that something was to be woman. And while the cynics and the misogynists might snicker in their sleeves and say that, through dress, woman was again laying a trap for man, the social philosophers would squash them with the argument that when a woman is her self, her natural self, her influence is of the loftiest from both a social and religious viewpoint.

The pronounced trend towards feminism in women's dress is also not to be without a certain amount of poltical significance.

Woman as a result of the change in fashions will once more become a distinctive individual. Since the war she has been as standardized a product as the motor car that made Detroit famous. Through dress woman is to separate herself from the mass of her sisters.

The modernists, the feminists may not like the idea of woman allowing her hair to grow, to sport longer skirts, to girdle herself with a corset and give herself a waistline, to wear the flapping Gainsborough hats of yesterday, and may rant about the impracticability of the new styles, but their protests will be in vain.

And the return of the womanly woman, through a change in fashion, augurs well for the spiritual life of the nation. Fashion is to be the expression of a newer and loftier ideal of life. The last decade, when woman was doing her best to masculinize herself, was a sorry one—culturally and ethically. A new age dawns—it is the age of the womanly woman. The reaction was inevitable.

ucts our export trade must suffer.

In other words, the loans that have enabled us to expand our export trade balance in recent years will, as time goes on, exert an increasing pressure in the other direction. The effects of intergovernmental debt payments and of payments of interest and principal on American loans abroad will be to decrease purchasing power and to create a strong demand for dollar exchange in the debtor countries. These factors, in turn, will tend to depress prices in those countries and to raise prices in the United States, and at the same time, to exert an upward pressure on the exchange rate of dollars in terms of foreign currencies. The effect of this situation will be to make it increasingly difficult for American producers to maintain costs at a competitive level and less difficult for European producers to offer strong inducements in the matter of price.

Stated in broad economic terms this means simply that the United States will find it increasingly difficult to maintain its position as an exporting nation and to prevent the encroachments of foreign producers in its domestic and foreign markets. A creditor nation is normally an importing nation. So far the United States has not become an importing nation because it has received "invisible" imports and has increased its foreign investments fast enough to offset the receipts from existing loans.

But the insistent demand for funds for European rehabilitation will not continue forever. In the long run Europe will probably not offer the most remunerative field for the investment of American capital, as it has in the last decade, and we must look elsewhere for opportunities to invest funds. As long as foreign countries continue to provide such outlets our export trade balance in commodities can be maintained. Little by little, European countries will probably be supplanted by the nations of the Southern Hemisphere, the New World and the Far East as the principal sources of demand for American capital and American goods.

Further difficulties will present themselves in the form of political obstacles. Despite the fact that economists with an international viewpoint have tried to remove some of the trade barriers that have hampered the flow of goods between countries, the world is being swept by a tide of protectionism, of which the United States is designed to be the principal victim. We must not be too intolerant in our attitude toward such measures, irritating and troublesome though they may be.

These measures are typical of the attitude that is developing in Europe and elsewhere toward American commercial aggression. The agitation for the removal of the trade barriers that were erected after the war, a movement in which our own industrialists and financiers took a part, is reacting against us by taking the form of a Pan-European spirit in economic affairs. This is typified by Briand's proposal for a United States of Europe. The immediate political possibilities of such a scheme do not appear to be very great, but its potentialities as an economic weapon directed against the United States are considerably more impressive. Whatever its tangible effects may be it indicates an attitude that is sure to shape the commercial policies of European countries in coming years and is sure to represent an added problem for our exporters to contend with.

How can we best prepare ourselves for the difficult period that lies ahead? Many possible ways suggest themselves. For the time being we can help both others and ourselves by a reasonable degree of leniency in dealing with foreign customers who, by reason of conditions over which they have little or no control, find themselves unable to live up to the letter of their contracts. We can apply the same principle in a more permanent way by adopting a more general attitude of tolerance and broad-mindedness in dealing with business men in countries where customs, laws and practices are different from our own. We can strive for better transportation and communication facilities. We can support and encourage the efforts that are being made by our government to place better diplomatic and trade-promotion facilities at our disposal.

Most important of all we can endeavor to dispel the fallacious and short-sighted views of those who look askance upon our import trade as an invasion of the natural and rightful markets of our producers. There is a strong body of opinion in this country to the effect that the purpose of the state should be to equalize costs of production at home and abroad—to nullify the natural advantages that enable some nations to produce some commodities more cheaply than others. Of all the forms of political interference with economic forces this is perhaps the worst. If such an ideal could be realized in practice all international trade would cease.

It will be true in the future, even more than in the past, that one of the most effective ways for American business to increase its volume of exports is by the indirect method of encouraging imports.

The general outlook for our foreign commerce is, then, that for the time being it will remain at comparatively low levels; that gradually the world-wide recovery of business and the need of capital and American goods abroad will reassert themselves; that, little by little, other countries will supplant Europe as the most profitable fields for American investment and American export expansion; that this shift will involve economic readjustments which may temporarily interfere with the development of our foreign trade, but will not permanently check it; that ultimately our creditor position will result in an import trade balance in commodities, and that throughout this process our ability to sell our products abroad will depend upon our ability and willingness to buy the products of others.

HOW MANY COUNTRIES EQUIP YOUR HOME?

How American is the American home?

"American industry supplies a majority of the equipment of the average American home, but, according to commerce reports, in many homes are products that originated in more countries than are represented in the League of Nations," says a bulletin from the Washington, D. C., headquarters of the National Geographic Society.

Piano Keys From African Elephants.

"From the roof which contains tin from Malay, to the cellar where pipes might be covered with Canadian asbestos, foreign articles are utilized by builders and housewives. It is not unusual to find the American home floor covered with Turkish or Persian rugs, the rooms furnished with mahogany from Nicaragua forests, the tables covered with English tapestry, the mantels adorned with bric-a-brac 'Made in Japan' (or France). Candles and phonograph records contain Brazilian vegetable wax.

"The ivory piano keys once graced the jaws of a Central African elephant, and perhaps the leather binding on the library books once clothed New Zealand animals, and the supply of glassware and earthenware was molded in Czechoslovakia.

"A well-stocked pantry is the result of the labor of peoples of many climes," continues the bulletin. "On the shelves, there may be Brazilian coffee and nuts, Iraq dates, Turkish figs, Ceylon coconuts, Spanish olives and olive oil, canned Japanese crab meat, Cuban sugar, nutmergs from the Guianas, rice from Burma, or Indo-China Formosa tea, citron from Palestine, Norwegian sardines, English marmalades, Chinese ginger, Holland pickles, Spanish raisins, Ecuador cocoa and cashew nuts from Madras, India.

"In the refrigerator may repose such articles as Sicilian lemons, Costa Rican pineapples, Honduran bananas, Italian cherries, Spanish grapes, fresh fish from Canada, canned caviar from Russia, South African lobsters and Argentine meat.

"The bathroom also may have a foreign touch. In the soap rack, perhaps, is a bar containing palm oil from Nigeria and in the toothbrush holder, brushes from Japan. The curtain around the shower may contain Malay or Brazilian rubber, but an international array of supplies is more evident in the medicine cabinet: Italian cream of tartar, Chilean iodine, Brazilian ipecac, German menthol, Javanese or Peruvian quinine, Venezuelan castor oil and cod liver oil from Iceland or Labrador.

"Milady's dressing table is incomplete without sweet scented perfumes, some of which, perhaps, were imported from France. Chemically analyzed, they might be found to contain extracts from rose petals grown in Bulgaria, musk from oxen of Tibet and civet, an extract from Ethiopian civet cats. The handles of the hair brush, mirror and the comb may be products of Argentine casein.

Ecuador "Panama" Hats.

"The family clothes racks display silk clothing, the threads of which, perhaps, were spun by silk worms in Turkey or Japan. The skins in the karakul coat on the next rack once were worn by karakul lambs on the plains of Central Asia. The panama hat was made in Ecuador, while the felt hat contains hair that once scampered across Australian fields around rabbit carcasses. The hides in the shoes on the shoe rack perhaps originated in Chile or Argentina."

"Amy is hoppin' mad about one o' her kids gettin' licked in school, an' is threatenin' to go to law about it. I didn't argue with her, because she's too mad to talk sense, but I could o' told her that kids don't never get licked for bein' angelic.

"I ain't sayin' the teacher done right. If a teacher had o' licked one o' my girls when they was goin' to school, I reckon I'd o' snatched him bald-headed. I done my own lickin' when necessary, an' didn't need no help.

"But I've noticed the kids that get licked in school most always has parents that ain't got gumption enough to train 'em at home. They spoil the little hyenas an' send 'em to school to afflict the teachers with their hatefulness an' then say the teachers ain't got no right to lay hands on 'em.

"Maybe not; but if that's the way they look at it, they ain't got no right to send 'em to school. If my dog goes mad, I may be the only one that's got a right to shoot him; but if I don't exercise my right, somebody else has got it to do.

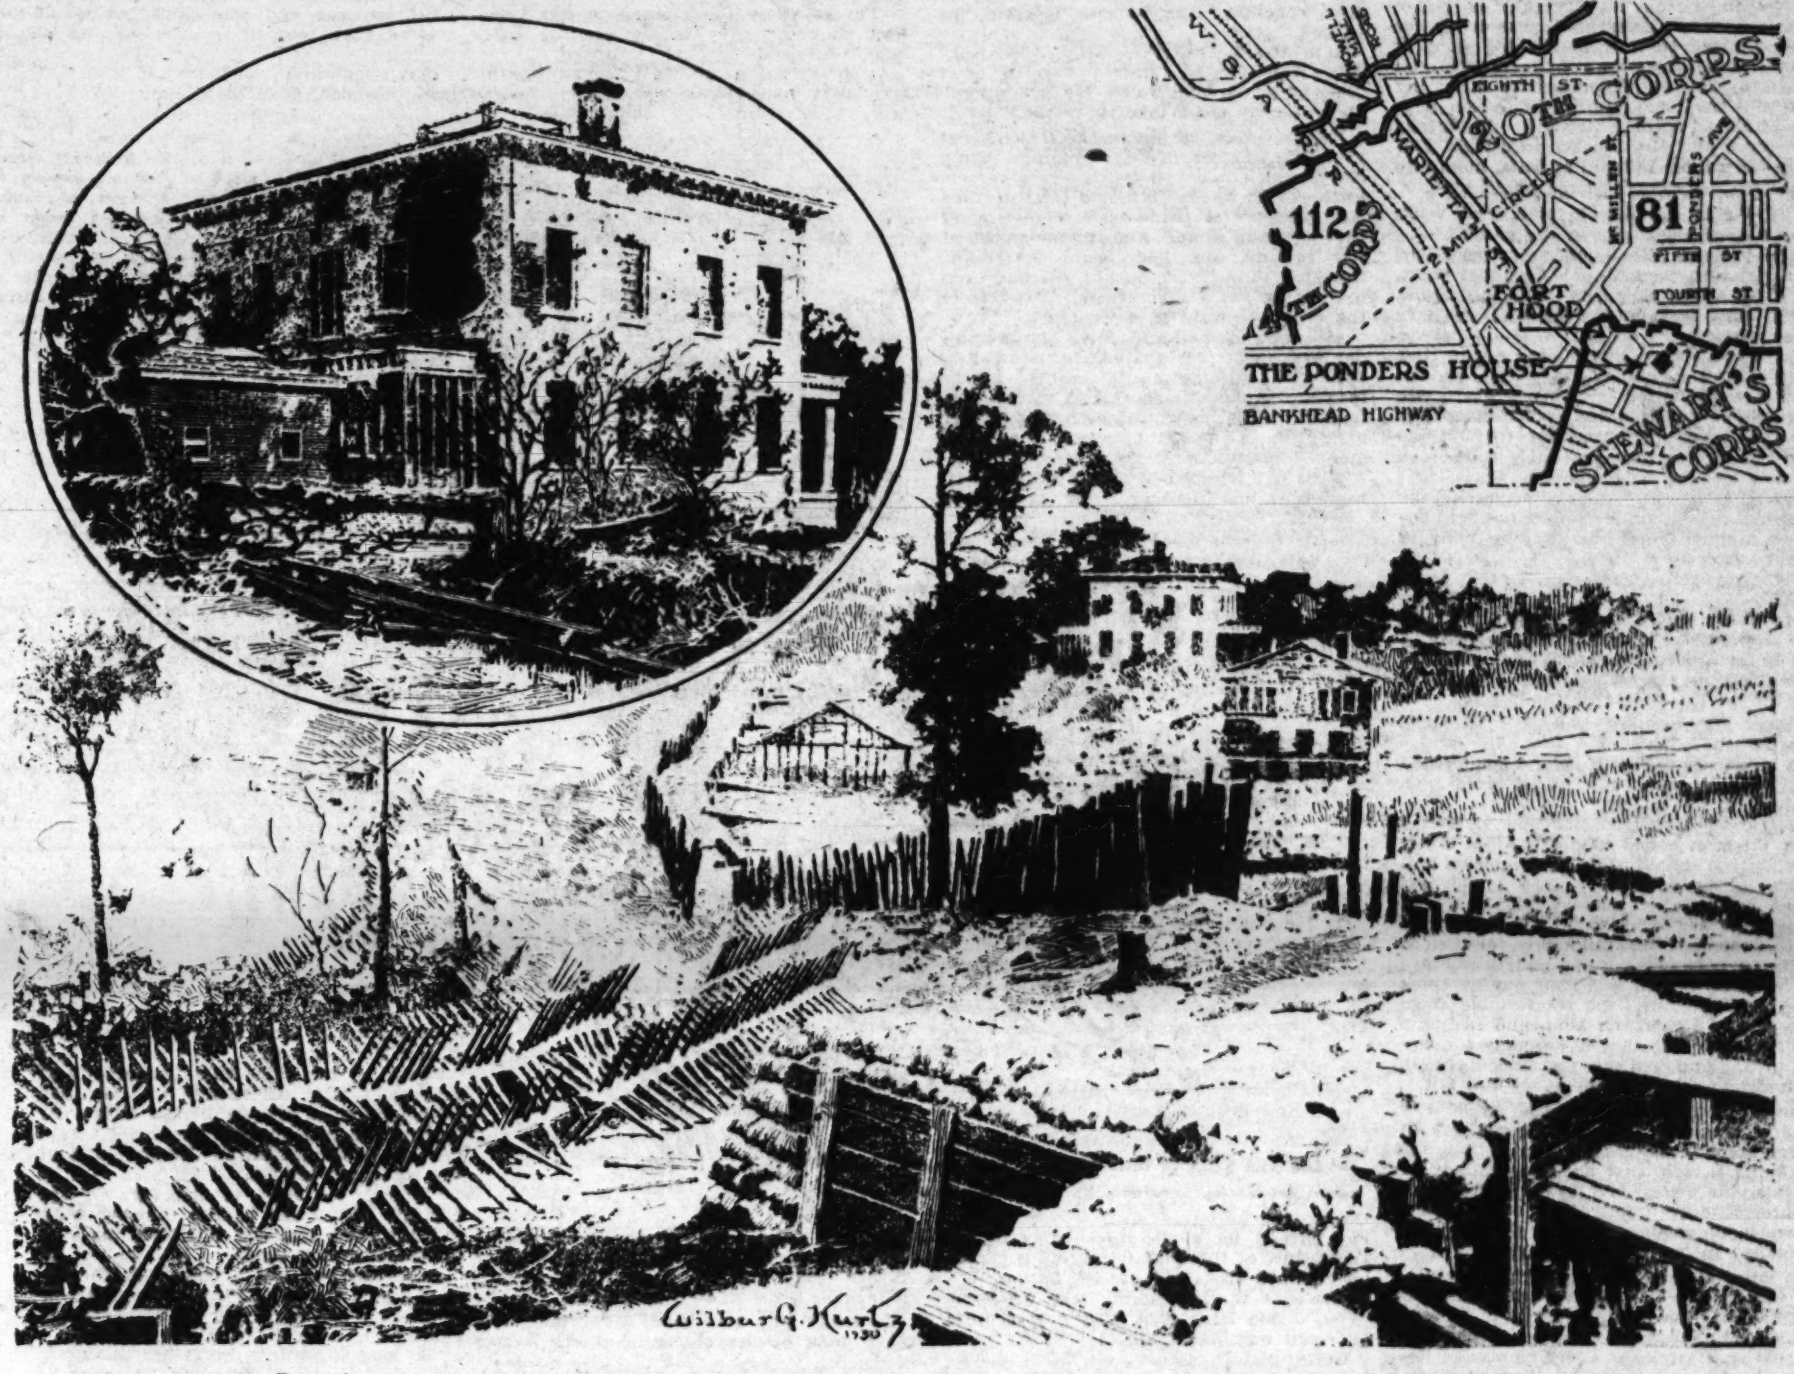

"I wouldn't let a teacher lick mine, but I wouldn't let mine need it.

"Amy might as well say the police ain't got no right to lock up her husband when she let's him slip out after he's drunk enough home brew to think he can lick the world."

No. 3-Fort Hood and the Ponders House

From the ramparts of Fort Hood, looking toward the Ponders House. In oval—the Ponders House, showing effect of shell fire.

BY WILBUR G. KURTZ.

A War-time Locality on Marietta Street, and What Happened There.

WHEN O. M. Poe signed his name and gave his rank as "Capt., Corps of Engineers, Chief Engineer Mil. Div. Miss.," he was not only writing the name of a celebrated personage, to whom he was related, but he was also recording an unprecedented official status in the United States army. Here was a mere captain of engineers functioning as chief engineer of Sherman's army in Georgia. It was all due to a political scramble for official appointments, and Poe, who had been nominated brigadier general for meritorious service in Virginia, found himself not even a colonel, which office he had resigned.

Sherman not only had a colossal contempt for such political chicanery, but he possessed the ability to recognize merit wherever he saw it, so Captain Poe became his chief engineer.

Thus it was that on the 2d of September, 1864, when the troops of the 26th Corps marched in on Marietta street from the environs of Bolton, and took over the city after its formal surrender by Major Calhoun, Captain Poe began his duties, as chief engineer, to inspect the nature and condition of the Atlanta fortifications with the view of adapting them to the occupancy of the federal army. The victorious troops, those first to enter via Marietta street, were amazed to see the tremendous fortifications extending across their path, and making a salient angle in the encircling line about the city.

The Sevastopol legend was less than 10 years of age, when Petersburg and Atlanta fortifications were built. The Napoleonic influence was still paramount in their design, for at both Petersburg and Atlanta we find the bags of earth, the bristling chevaux de frise, the revetted earth banks with artillery embrasures, and the board platforms for the heavy guns. It is interesting to compare the Confederate defense works at Kenesaw with those at Atlanta. At the former place, what with haste and expediency, the revetments were tree trunks; sawmills were not available, and the pioneer with the ax was both architect and builder. The Atlanta fortifications were planned and constructed far ahead of the time when they became of actual use. Engineer L. P. Grant, who designed them, dated his plans April 12, 1864, and the first federal shell screamed its way over the ramparts not until July 22. The revetments were products of adjacent sawmills; we can imagine all available lumber yards commandeered, both of accumulated stock and of production. Even frame dwellings were pulled down to line the earth walls and pave their approaches. Then the pick and shovel brigades were the impressed colored gentry of the city and adjoining plantations, and what they wrought, with plenty of time, material and much vocal music, has come down to us in that amazing series of photographs taken by George M. Barnard, chief photographer, in Captain Poe's engineer corps. Before Poe altered a defense line, or moved any obstructing abattis, Barnard's camera and portable dark room were busy at all points of interest along the six miles of encircling forts and rifle pits.

Fort Wood was the chief bastion in the Confederate defense line. It was on Marietta street, where the present Bankhead highway (old Bellwood avenue) joins, and to the northward of this junction is a little insignificant street, the houses of which cling to its borders from the top of the grade, having been left up there when the street was lowered to meet the new Marietta street level. This is Fort Wood place, and it correctly marks the site of and preserves the name of the historic fort.

That the fort was named for Wood instead of Johnston, is very well explained when its date of incorporation in the line is ascertained, for be it known that while most of the defense works were built in May or June, this huge fort did not become a salient in the line until July 22, when Wood and not Johnston commanded the Confederate army. The L. P. Grant plans called for an outlying fort here on the commanding ground, adjacent as it was to the railroad, but not until the outer defense line to the northward was abandoned the night of July 21 did this isolated battery emplacement become an integral part of the defense line of Atlanta. This fort, and a few others eastward, were then in feverish haste, strengthened and connected by rifle pits, obstructions and palisades, the negro laborers and the soldiery working all night to make them tenable by the troops of Stewart's corps.

Thus Fort Wood became a salient angle in the northwest wing of the Atlanta defense works; there was a similar wing northeast of the city, added at the same time.

Near Fort Wood place and two blocks toward town, is Ponders avenue. This name is all that preserves the locality of that celebrated domicile, that, during the August days of 1864, became a martyr to the southern cause. It stood in the north angle of Ponders and Marietta, and fronted on the latter. Miss Sarah Huff remembers it as a large country estate on a hill, the terraced grounds being laid out in formal design with flowers and shrubbery. Boxwood trees figured much in the arboreal treatment. The Ponders family are said to have been of English origin, and it is likely their estate followed the traditional English prescriptions. There must have been an "orangery," for no English estate of mid-eighteenth to mid-nineteenth century was complete without one, anymore than the modern cliff-dwellers, prior to the advent of radio, would feel at home without a rub-

AT TWILIGHT

BLUE RIBBON FICTION

ETHEL LINA WHITE

A Woman, Timid and Fearful Her Whole Life Long, Finds Herself Shut in a House Alone with a Presence Too Horrible to Grasp.

THE world seemed to end at Pyman's Corners and pile itself up in a green wash of trees. Although it was still afternoon, the autumn mists had veiled the evergreen shrubs in Miss Luck's moist, leaf-strewn garden so that the lawn seemed peopled with crouching forms.

Standing at her parlor window, Miss Luck thought of churchyard lights—the whisper in the lane—the footsteps on the stairs—all the old nursery tales of horror and fear. In appearance, however, she looked more than a match for man or ghost. A tall, massive woman, she wore an iron gray suit cut on masculine lines; her powerful shoulders and muscular back suggested almost ruthless strength. She turned her head and the illusion vanished. Her face was a mere handful of little, indefinite features over which peered timid eyes.

"Fay," she bleated, in a small, weak voice, "I saw a—a tree move in the garden."

The younger Miss Luck, a featherweight of a girl with a small, pale face and short, dark elf locks, laughed. "Did it? Now, that's quite interesting. Suppose we have a look at it."

As she rose and put her arm within that of her aunt the enormous lady felt a sudden gust of courage, for this tiny creature was more than her niece and companion. She was her protector. Together they peered into the gloomy garden, nearly submerged in that strange medium—the shade "between the lights." And immediately the creeping, misted trees stopped in their advance and stiffened into definite holly or laurel.

"Where's your wonderful tree?" asked Fay.

Miss Luck laughed in her relief. She did not know that she was unable to point it out to her niece because it had crept so much closer to the cottage that it was lurking behind the pillars of the porch.

"Draw the curtains and let's be snug, Felicia," she said.

"I love to be called 'Felicia,'" commented Fay. "Being small, my name gives such chances to be obvious."

"I know." Miss Luck nodded. "I always wish I'd been called 'Grace.' After Grace Darling, you know. It's my ambition and dream to save life."

She squared her massive shoulders and flung back her head, every inch a heroine. At this moment she could have faced lions or raging seas. Because—at this moment—the witched garden was shut out by thick wine red curtains; the comfortable room glowed with light from lamp and fire; the gilt clock told her that it was only a quarter to 5. And, on the rug, was a small, dark girl in a leaf brown jersey and kilt.

Unfortunately, she saw the smile Fay tried to suppress. It made her writhe with secret shame. It was in vain that she reminded herself that she was a lady of considerable wealth and, as such, an object of interest to her family. She could always depend upon some niece eager to "keep her company" in her Sussex cottage.

In spite of her armor of frigid dignity, she was the meekest soul, at heart. A street urchin could make her quail by a shouted insult. She never rode in an omnibus because she feared the angry glances of the passengers she crushed. She allowed tradespeople to overcharge her rather than risk a scene.

Of course, the poor lady was really to be pitied, since her cowardice was chiefly due to a deficient pituitary gland. Nature had given her the frame of an Amazon with the heart of a mouse. Her fault lay in not trying to control her nerves. Because of this, she was doomed to a terrible moment, when her whole nature hung crucified with suffering and shame.

As Fay remained silent, Miss Luck tried to force her to an admission. "Did you hear how that gardener you—I—discharged described me to Elsie?" she asked. "He said I was a fat old coward. Really fantastic!"

"Really insolent," said Fay, severely.

"I confess it made me laugh. . . . Now, would you call me a coward?"

Fay noticed that the tip of her aunt's nose quivered, as it always did, in moments of emotion. In spite of her natural contempt, she suddenly felt very sorry for Miss Luck. Fortunately, she was spared a reply by the ringing of the telephone bell from the hall.

"I'll answer it," she said, quickly.

When she returned there was a jaded look on her small, vivid face. "Frightfully sorry, Aunt Winny," she said. "I've got to go out, immediately."

Miss Luck's mouth dropped. "Leave me all alone?"

"But, angel, it's still afternoon. It's only for half an hour. And you'll have Elsie."

"No. It's her evening out. Where are you going?"

Fay braced her nerves for another scene.

"To the police station," she replied. "They've arrested another man, and they want me to identify him."

Miss Luck's face puckered with rage and fear. "Felicia," she gasped, "I forbid you to go."

"I'm afraid it's nothing to do with you." Fay's tone lacked respect. "And I don't see why you should worry. It's my funeral. O, dear, why did I take that walk?"

Her face grew wistful as she remembered that wild wet day of high wind and flying leaves which had tempted her to a ramble in the beech woods. She had been so filled with the joy of living—so unconscious of the horror in store. And, in the midst of her rapture, she had heard a scream. Breaking through the bushes, she had been in time to see a man rushing away from the prostrate form of a woman.

Although she had missed the actual murder and was thus spared the nauseating details—which her aunt devoured in the morning paper—the shock was severe. She re-lived that moment, together with her breathless rush to the police station, in many a nightmare.

What had tried her nerves most, however, was her aunts' attitude. She reproached

—'She had been in time to see a man rushing away from the prostrate form of a woman.'

Fay bitterly for giving information of the appearance of the criminal and thus exposing them to his possible recrimination.

"We're a marked house," she quavered. "You should have kept your own counsel and said nothing at all."

Unfortunately, some of Miss Luck's gloomy prophecy had been fulfilled. The police made an arrest, but Fay failed to identify the man. Although her name was kept out of the papers, she must have been seen as she left the station, for the next day she received an anonymous note.

"I seen you. Keep your trap shut or I'll serve you same as I done her.

"A Man of His Word."

Fay crushed the note in her indignation. "Fancy that calling itself a man. Optimist. I'm jolly glad now I saw the little rat."

But some of the poison which lurks in every anonymous letter got under her skin. She could not rid herself of the impression that her movements were dogged. Therefore she was careful to avoid lonely localities and not to go out, unaccompanied, after dark.

Today's message from the police station came as a relief. Her description of a gentleman of brunette coloring, smart appearance, and poor physique applied to more than one member of a razor gang in which the police were interested. But, since the problem boiled itself down to a suspect being unable to account for his movements on a certain fatal Wednesday afternoon, she was hopeful that, this time, she would return to the cottage with the comforting knowledge that the criminal was safely under lock and key.

Her lips were set as she walked into the hall and took down her brown tweed coat from its peg. When she returned to the parlor her aunt looked at her with dog-like appealing eyes. She had many nieces—all attractive and charming—but this independent chit was the one she cared for most, and was, in fact, her principal legatee. She wanted desperately to win back Fay's respect.

Fay's lips did not relax at her unspoken plea.

"I'm going to the kitchen to tell Elsie that she must stay in for another half hour," she said.

As she spoke, she regarded her aunt with eyes that had grown speculative. Apart from her failing, Miss Luck was a good and charitable soul, with excellent qualities. At her death she would be missed more than many an attractive personality.

Suddenly Fay felt that she would be really fond of the old thing if she were not such a desperate coward. With the regrettable urge for reformation which animates most young and ardent natures, she wondered if it would be possible to cure her aunt of cowardice. She would have to endure a sharp lesson, but the result would justify any pain. She must be made afraid of some peril which was non-existent, and thus receive a demonstration of the futility of fear.

"How?" wondered Fay, her eyes brilliant as diamonds.

But, even as she racked her brains, she remembered the classic horror of the man who frightened his wife with a dead snake, only to attract its living mate. Fay shook her head. Her idea held dangerous possibilities. But it spurred her on to reopen the vexed question.

"You asked me, just now," she said, "what I thought of you. Well, I think you are a puzzle. I can understand a rabbit being frightened of a snake, because they're different orders. But it beats me altogether why one human being would be frightened of another human being."

Fay laid down the law with youthful authority, ignorant of the fact that the human species has its rabbits and snakes.

"Wouldn't you be frightened if a man attacked you?" asked Miss Luck.

"No. I'd put up such a fight for it that I'd be too angry to feel afraid, although I'm only a shrimp. And that's why you're such a mystery to me. You know, if you were ferocious, instead of being a darling, every one would be afraid of you. You make me think of some force that doesn't know its own strength. Like an elephant that allows itself to be meekly led by a pigmy."

Fay checked her eloquence at the sight of Miss Luck's face, which was scarlet, while the tip of her nose quivered violently. Too late, she realized that her tactless allusion to her aunt's proportions had mortally offended that sensitive lady.

"Out of her will," she thought, fatalistically, as she went into the kitchen.

She caught Elsie in the act of applying lipstick before the small mirror. Her pretty face had rather a foxy expression. Although it was not yet 5 o'clock, she wore the Lido blue coat and small felt hat which showed that, temporarily, she was out of service.

"My aunt wants you to stay in until 5:30 this afternoon, Elsie," said Fay.

"Then 'want' must be her master," returned Elsie, smartly.

She knew her value as a treasure whose only fault was carelessness, and she had no intention of making herself cheap. By leaving the cottage at 5 she could obtain her seat at the cinema for the low price of the afternoon session.

"Where's the sense of me staying?" she argued. "She's set in the drawing room and me here, and she won't see me once all the blooming time."

Suddenly, Fay saw a chance of the desired lesson for her aunt. There would be no possible risk in leaving her alone, at this ridiculously early hour, for 30 minutes.

"So long as you can make her think you are here," she said, carelessly, "it seems to amount to the same thing."

She brought back the tidings to Miss Luck that Elsie would stay in.

"And they're going to fetch me and bring me back in a car," she added, "so there'll be no risk of meeting the man, I'm sorry to say."

She noticed that Elsie had taken off her coat and hat and was wearing her muslin apron when she announced Sergeant Davis. He was an excellent type of policeman, powerfully built, with a pleasant and intelligent face.

"Sorry to trouble you again," he said, addressing Miss Luck, "but I think we've got our bird this time. We're lucky to have some one like your young lady, who knows her mind right off. Indeed, we're most grateful to both you ladies for your public spirited attitude and your pluck."

Miss Luck bridled and threw back her shoulders at this praise. She felt every inch a heroine, so tonic was the combination of the policeman's admiration and Elsie's apron.

She accompanied the sergeant and Fay to the hall, and although the front door stood ajar she never shuddered at the garden, wanly visible in the pallid shroud of twilight. It was Fay who remembered the perambulating tree.

"My aunt thought she saw a man lurking 'round," she said.

"If he is, we'll soon have him out," remarked the sergeant, darting across the lawn and ducking 'round every shrub and tree.

"Not a smell of any one," he said, re-

When All The Experts Agree on any Matter, It Is Well for the Layman to Pay Heed

By Shepard G. Barclay

WHENEVER all of the leading experts agree in any matter the likelihood of their being right is so great that it is tantamount to certainty. Physicians disagree in plenty of things, but are unanimous regarding some problems. In these particulars few laymen would deign to dispute them, and the same should logically be true of bridge experts. But it is not. There are frequent cases of bright players of necessarily limited experience who essay to pit their restricted observation against the findings of those whose lifetime study has established the truth or fallacy of various dogmas. If the authorities differ in their versions of some move the neophyte may take his choice, or perhaps work out a method of his own, but where they are all absolutely in step it generally behooves him to do likewise.

One of the universally accepted principles of bidding is that it is dangerous to bid no trump, after the other side has bid a suit, unless one of two conditions prevails. If the no trump bidder has the hostile suit safely "stopped" twice, his bid is O. K. Or if he has a set-up no trump game, with only one sure stopper in the adverse suit, it is considered sound, for when he uses that one stopper to "get in," he can sail along through a series of the necessary number of tricks. But, lacking one of these two situations, a suit bid is almost always the safest procedure.

The costliness of violating this principle was startlingly emphasized in a recent championship tournament, when one really good player "had a hunch" that he could "get away with it," as he later explained. The hand was played in the auction event, but the principle works out in the same way in contract. This was the hand:

After South and West had passed, North bid one no trump. East and South passed, and West, Mrs. Robert B. Fuller, of Brooklyn, bid two hearts. Following passes by North and East, South called three diamonds. There the bidding should have ended, but one usually proficient Boston player, seated in the North, thought he would venture three no trumps—and did. He reckoned that the diamond suit would probably be solid, so that his one stopper of hearts would be enough, but in this case "probably" was not good enough.

East led the jack of hearts, top of his partner's suit, which fell to the ace, and West came back with the queen, which was won by North's lone stopper, the king. North then raced through his two spade tricks, three diamonds and two clubs for a total of eight tricks, but found that East had the diamonds stopped then, and he had to lose the rest of the tricks, going down one.

Bid soundly, the hand is played at three diamonds, and efficient play is crowned with success. Commander Winfield Liggett, Jr., holder of many championships, made a small slam in diamonds at one table. The lead against him was the queen of spades, captured by dummy's king. A lead of the diamond ace dropped West's trump queen, showing East to hold the rest of the trumps and an apparently sure trump trick. Here was a real problem, for dummy had only one little trump to lead through East. It seemed that East would wind up holding the 10 and 7 of trumps, while declarer with king and 8 would be in the lead and thus would have to give East one. But Liggett worked it out.

First he led dummy's little trump, on which East put the nine, and took it with his jack. After winning with his club ace and king, he led a small club, which he trumped. Here he led a heart from his hand to be taken by the ace of West, who led another heart for dummy to nab with the king. Another little club from dummy was trumped, then a spade led, which dummy captured by finessing the 10. Now the club jack was led, and when East discarded a heart instead of trumping Liggett let it ride. With just two spades left in dummy, both East and South had to trump. It made no difference which East put on; South would overtake and drop his last one.

If Liggett had not got rid of those trumps by ruffing the clubs, if he had had three trumps left for the last three tricks, he would have had to take the eleventh trick in his own hand, and therefore East would have scored a trick.

The difference between sound and unsound bidding in this case meant the difference between making game and being set; with expert playing added it meant a small slam.

The Oracle Says:

Don't lend any money to the man who watches his partner's facial expressions.

A Law a Week.

When should dummy expose his hand?—Many a person has the habit of placing his trumps face up on the table as soon as the bidding is ended and he has been established as dummy, doing this before the original lead has been made. This is absolutely unnecessary, is not in accordance with the laws, and sometimes gives the hostile leader an advantage he is not entitled to. Often it causes the leader to make a lead more advantageous for his side than if he had not seen those trumps. The law specifies that the dummy places his cards face up on the table after the original lead has been made. Any player who does it before that is simply helping the opponents.

(Next Week—Original lead made by the wrong player.)

«« « Helpless » »»

Poor little cards—all twisted, torn and bruised;
Helpless little things—how you've been abused!
What great big brutes, with bully ways infested,
Bent your pretty backs? They ought to be arrested.

Just a while ago, how your faces shone;
So you would be now, had they only known
Worthwhile men do not make the helpless suffer;
Thoughtless, careless ways only mark the duffer.

Bridge Intimacies.

Sidney S. Lenz, winner of more bridge championships than he can count, was once a star jumper. The standing high jump was his specialty, but he had the misfortune to be in the era of Ray C. Ewry, wrecker of records, who was known as "the human scissors." The real battle was generally to see who could get second place; hence most of Lenz's jumping medals are silver and bronze instead of gold, in contrast to his bridge prizes. He could bowl, too, having one perfect 300 game to his credit, but when bridge finally lured him, he put all of those games behind him. He doesn't even play golf now, according to some who have seen him cover 36 holes a day whenever he gets a chance. Next to bridge, golf is his pet nuisance.

Contract Systems.

Being vulnerable and having a score of 90 on the second game, how would you bid the following hands?

NORTH
♠ 2 ♥ 10 6 4 2 ♦ 5 4 3 ♣ A K 10 9 2
SOUTH (Dealer)
♠ A Q J 10 ♥ A K Q 9 3 7 ♦ K Q 2 ♣ —

When the side has a partial score an original bid for one more trick than the number needed for game is a "slam signal" in any system. In the case given one heart would be a bid for game, and therefore a bid of two hearts would tell partner that slam appears likely if he has anything in his hand which may help to that end. He is, therefore, commanded to keep the bidding open if he has any high card strength or a void suit.

Most players holding the North hand would respond to the two hearts with three hearts, which, in effect, would say to the original bidder: "I have good support for your hearts and also some slam material; go ahead and bid whatever else you have as slam material and I'll come back at you and show what suit mine is in." After that South would bid three spades to show his ace, North four clubs to show control of that suit. South would then figure that he could probably discard some of his few losers on the clubs, so would bid six hearts. If North had the ace of diamonds or a void suit of diamonds he would now bid the seven hearts, but, lacking them, he passes.

Some players would respond to the two hearts with three clubs. In these cases South would generally bid three spades, then North four hearts to show his support for partner's suit, after which South would bid six hearts.

South having bid one diamond and West one spade, what would you bid, as North, on the following hand?

♠ A ♥ A K Q 2 ♦ K Q 4 3 2 ♣ 4 3 2

Auction Problems

South having bid one no trump and all passed, what would you lead from the following hands?

A
♠ Q J ♥ A Q 8 6 ♦ J 8 7 6 2 ♣ 3 2
B
♠ Q J ♥ 8 7 4 3 2 ♦ J 8 7 6 2 ♣ A
C
♠ Q J ♥ J 8 7 6 2 ♦ J 8 7 6 2 ♣ A

In every case these hands call for a lead of fourth best. The only question about them is regarding which suit to select. There is almost unanimous agreement regarding conventional leads against no trump without any other bidding, as follows: 1. Lead from the longest suit, no matter how weak it may be. 2. With two suits of equal length, lead from the stronger. 3. With two long suits of the same length and strength lead the higher ranking.

In A the longest suit is diamonds, so the six of diamonds is the lead. In B both hearts and diamonds are of five cards, but the diamond suit is stronger, hence the lead is the six of diamonds. In C the heart and diamond suits are exactly equal in length and strength, the hearts being chosen because they are higher ranking; the six of hearts is the lead.

Sometimes an "irregular lead" pays—as in the case of a hand with tenaces at the tops of three suits, when the fourth suit may be led—but, as a rule, it pays to let your partner depend absolutely on your lead being conventional, so that he may make inferences which will guide him in the play.

The New Problem.

South bid one no trump, West and North passed, East bid two hearts, South two no trump and all passed. What would you, as West, lead from the following hands?

A
♠ 7 6 5 ♥ K 5 3 ♦ J 8 4 3 2 ♣ 10 9
B
♠ 7 6 5 ♥ Q 5 3 ♦ J 8 3 2 ♣ 10 8
C
♠ 7 6 5 4 ♥ K 3 ♦ J 8 4 3 2 ♣ 10 9
D
♠ 7 6 5 ♥ 9 8 5 3 ♦ J 8 3 2 ♣ 10 8

OPERAS ARE TO BE SEEN AT, NOT HEARD

By Sam Hellman

"... I sure get a kick when the toreador sings the prison song ..."

"WE'RE going to the opera tonight," remarks Minnie Mellish. "How'd you folks like to come along? They're singing Aida."

"Aida?" I repeats. "Is that the opera in which somebody dies in the last act?"

"No," growls Ira Mellish. "Aida's the one which ends up with the Cherry sisters announcing the license numbers of the automobiles stolen in Sandusky, Ohio, during the recent fiscal spell."

"I'd love to go," chimes in Joe Davis. "Aida's my favorite uproar. Believe me, I sure get a kick when the toreador sings the prison song to the Egyptian slave girl while she's dying in the artist's attic. Where's there a better piece for oboes than the William Tell overture it opens up with?"

"Is the sextette in Aida?" I asks, not that I particularly care, but just to show that I'm no dumb David when it comes to the higher and the fewer in music.

"I don't know," admits Joe frankly. "It's pretty hard to keep track of the sextette. It's here today and up in Mabel's room tomorrow. The last time I heard the piece from Lucia, it was part of a song and dance put on during the Hand-Knitted, Left-Handed Monkey-Wrench Hour . . . Have you ever been to an opera?"

"Don't make me laugh on the anniversary of my dog's death," says I, with some petulance. "I've been in one."

"You!" exclaims Ira.

"Probably a case of mistaken identity," observes Davis charitably. "Do tell us about it."

"It was during my high school days at East Rahway," I begins. "The senior class put on Carmen and, on account of my having a sort of stoop to my shoulders, I was given the part of Shylock—"

"Shylock!" gasps Minnie Mellish, who travels on parallel lines with her brains and thus avoids a meeting. "Why, Shylock—"

"I'm a bit confused," says I. "That was in a show put on by the Young Ladies' Auxiliary of the Shelley Inside-Straight and Tulip Association. Othello, I think, we called it."

"Shakespeare," remarks Joe, "called it The Merchant of Venice."

"We called it Othello," I insists. "I remember that distinctly on account of Patty Ferguson playing Falstaff. But to get on with Carmen."

"Why?" sniffs the missus, who up to this time had taken no part in the conversation. However, she could easily have been indicted for mayhem by a jury of mind readers for what she'd been thinking of the old provider.

"Well," I goes on, "they tried me out in several parts—a gentleman of Verona, Lieutenant Pinkerton—"

"Lieutenant Pinkerton," cuts in Minnie, "is a character in Madame Butterfly."

"He may be now," says I, "but such was not the case in the winter of '98 in East Rahway. It was finally decided," I continues, "that there was nothing quite fortissimo enough, or shall I say bravura—"

"You may, mon petit," smiles Davis, indulgently. "It's a good word and does your vocabulary credit."

"—bravura enough in Carmen," I resumes, "to do my coloratura basso justice, so it was arranged for me to go on between the second and third acts in a hat-throwing skit."

"A which?" demands Joe.

"Hat-throwing," I explained. "I sailed straw hats out over the heads of the audience and made 'em come back to me by boomeranging 'em. I closed with an imitation of four Latvians mimicking a young Shamokin, Pa., society girl whose birthday was on August 11."

"I once knew a girl whose birthday was on August 11," says Davis. "I wonder if they could have been the same."

"What year was she born?" I asks.

"Eighteen ninety-nine," he replies.

"Nope," I tells him. "The skirt I'm speaking of was born in Palozza and was—"

"That'll be enough of that," snaps the frau. "Go and get dressed. We're going to the opera."

"Over my quivering corpse," I growls.

"Preferably," says the missus.

I'm diked long before Kate and our house-guest, Davis, so I takes the opportunity to scum through the encyclopedia for some inside info on Aida. By the time we're ready to start, I know more about the opera than most Eskimos do about ice. We arrives just as they're about to lift the curtain on the farce comedy.

"I'll explain everything you don't understand," says Minnie. "The overture they're playing is—"

"Be yourself, baby," I scowls. "I've been kidding you folks. As a matter of fact, I'm well versed in opera and I may state without favor or fear of unsuccessful contradiction that Aida and I are just like that. There is little about it that is hidden from me and that little not for long."

"Yeh?" sneers Ira. "Who wrote it—Harriet Beecher Stowe or a couple of tuckpointers from Syracuse?"

"I suppose," says I, "you think I'm going to bite and say 'Verdi,' don't you?"

"Why not?" asks Minnie. "Verdi did write it, didn't he?"

"In your velvet toque!" I snorts. "Haven't you caught up with that myth yet? Verdi had no more to do with writing Aida than I had with the writing on the Rosetta stone. As a matter of fact the work was composed by an obscure Bohemian named Ignatz Schlimmel."

"Schimpfel," corrects Davis. "I'm surprised that a woman of Minnie's intelligence would fall for that Verdi yarn. Schimpfel," goes on Joe, "was a shy, bashful guy, so it was arranged that Verdi would get the credit for the composition on condition that he contribute the words, the music, the ballets, and the scenic settings. All the rest of the job was done by Schimpfel, who quit his work on Beethoven's sonatas and Bach's fugues to undertake the chore for—"

"After all," I horns in, "the authorship is not important. The main point to remember about Aida is that it was written to dedicate the Suez canal."

"That's not unusual," observes Davis. "The Banks of the Wabash was written to celebrate the lowering of the rediscount rate by the State Trust Company of Vincennes, Ind."

"Doubtless," says I, "but let's get back to Aida. Did you folks know that in the first year of its operation four hundred and six sloops carrying merchandise to the value of six hundred thousand pounds, no shillings, and four pence passed through the Suez canal?"

"There's some dispute about that," declares Joe. "According to the Almanac de Gotha six of the sloops were full-rigged brigatines and two of 'em Chinese sampans with rice consigned to the firm of Lee Chow and Company, Tsing Tau—"

"Sh!" hisses the wife. "Listen to the music."

The overture's in full swing, and I loans it a couple of my ears for a while, at the same time trying to dope out a plan for a getaway. Opera with me's like Browning—something spiffy to talk about, but a pain in the neck to be with.

"Don't you adore this Aida music?" gushes Minnie into my neck.

"I beg your pardon," says a voice behind us. "This is La Boheme they're playing. They had to postpone Aida on account of the star's illness."

(It is with much regret that we have given so much space to the wood-wind effects in Lohengrin, but we were rather swept away by the subject. Without vanity, however, we believe we have thoroughly demolished the assertions as to Wagner's motive in introducing the flute cadenza in the dining-room suite. Next time we shall boldly attack another form of American recreation—golf, centering our attention on the problem—Is it better to replace the turf or returf the place?)

SIXTH INSTALLMENT.

Uprisings against the Duke occur. Dauvelt is arrested for disloyalty. Philip, though innocent, pleads guilty under torture. Johanna begs for his life.

BERNANIER

He pushed Count Anthony forcibly into a chair, and . . . poured into his . . . sympathetic ears, the tale of his distractions.

PHILIP DANVELT and his wife sat at dinner on that October day that was big with fate for them.

They were waited upon now by an old negro servant, Jan, and a youth named Peter, who had been for some time of Philip's household. Nevertheless, Johanna's eyes were watchful ever for her husband's slightest need. And Philip, accepting all as a proper tribute to the master of the house, lacked even the grace to perceive in it a cause for self-congratulation.

Watching him now as he gobbled greedily, "You eat too quickly, Philip," she ventured in her solicitude.

"I have affairs awaiting me." His tone was gruff. He turned to Jan. "Is my horse saddled?"

"Waiting for you, master, with Gottfried, who is ready to ride with you."

"Then . . ." He broke off to listen. "What's that? They come this way."

The tramp of marching feet was close at hand; the clank of steel was audible above it.

Jan stepped to the window, and thrust his head from the open casement. Beyond the dripping garden gleamed the yellow waters of a canal. The pale sunlight flashed on the steel caps and pike-heads of a company of a dozen men-at-arms already abreast with the gate, which was standing open. After them came a big man on a big horse and beside him trotted a little elfin figure all in yellow.

"It's his excellency the governor," Jan announced from the window.

Up the steps came the Sire Claude de Rhynsault. After him hopped the Fool. After the Fool came a couple of clerkly fellows and after these two men-at-arms.

The governor entered and looked down upon Danvelt with the cold contempt of the professional soldier for the burgher.

"You, I suppose, are Philip Danvelt?" Then he caught sight of Johanna, who was staring in fascinated horror at the misshapen Fool. Perceiving her, Rhynsault asked himself where he had last seen her, presently to remember the interest she had aroused in him at the Gravenhof. He bowed his sleek black head.

"I implore your pardon, mistress. I had not before observed you. My intrusion here is in the course of the duties of my office. But it would have been less rude had I suspected your presence."

"I thank you, sir, for the apology. Your business will be with my husband." And she left the room.

The governor noisily cleared his throat. "Well, well, let's come to business, Master Danvelt."

"With all my heart," said the merchant.

"You may be less hearty over it by and by. Have you ever heard of one Thomas Tegal of the town of Veere?"

"Not until you hanged him a week ago and then all Zealand heard of him."

The Fool, who sat at the table, in the place that Johanna had vacated, his elbows on the board, his chin in his cupped palms, here interrupted:

"Hanging will often make a man famous that might otherwise have died unknown. There's hope for you, Master Danvelt. The hope of fame." He sighed noisily, and gave his attention to a dish of comfits.

Rhynsault pursued his questioning. "And you had never heard of this Tegal until then?"

"Never to my knowledge."

The governor considered him intently. "By the blood! You're a glib liar." He turned to one of the secretaries. "Give me that letter marked Danvelt."

He received and folded it so that only the signature was visible. "Come here," he bade Danvelt, and, when the merchant had obeyed, he thruse the paper under his nose. "What name do you read there?"

"P. Danvelt."

"Your own name, eh?"

"Yes. . . . It is my name."

"So! You confess it, then!" Rhynsault rose, handing back the letter to his secretary. "It is wise of you to spare us further trouble."

"Confess it?" cried Danvelt between fear and fury. "Confess what? What have I confessed."

"Why, that you wrote that letter."

"Nay, now, nay!" Danvelt protested. His mind was reeling. "You go too fast. I did not so much as see a letter. All that you showed me was a name."

"Your name. Your name appended to a letter written to this convicted traitor Tegal, in which you promised him supplies of arms and money to forward the enterprise in hand. A hanging matter, Master Danvelt."

"For the writer, perhaps, but I am not he."

Rhynsault showed signs of exasperation. "Does it not bear your name?"

"My name, yes. But not my signature."

"Why, what's the difference? Is this a riddle, sir?"

Master Danvelt, exasperated also on his side, answered almost contemptuously: "A riddle that your Fool—that any fool—can read for you at a glance."

Kuoni raised his head from the dish of comfite. "Sir, I read fate; not riddles. I could read your's at this moment with tolerable certainty."

Meeting his eyes, Danvelt shivered. He turned again to the governor, and again changed his tone. "I mean, excellency, that I never wrote that or any other treasonable letter. The signature is not mine, as my signature will show. The name even . . . it is but P. Danvelt."

"And what should P stand for but Philip?"

"It might stand for Peter or Paul."

"Or even," the Fool put in, "For Priscilla, Petronilla, or Penelope; or again, for prudent, pernicious, pestilent, or philosophical. But when all is considered, I think it really stands for patibulary. Indeed, patibulary is pre-eminently prognostic of the fate of this Danvelt. Unless . . ."

"Quiet, Fool!" The governor snapped at him. Then he waved his pikemen forward. "Make him fast."

Distraught, the merchant sprang forward, his hands outheld in supplication.

"Sir, sir, hear me out before offering me a violence the duke could never sanction."

"They all say that," the governor sneered.

"This charge is absurd and empty," Danvelt pursued. "I take God and Our Lady to witness that I have never engaged in any treason, never so much as harbored any thought of treason. I never wrote that letter, whatever it contains. I swear, I never wrote it."

"You repeat yourself, and reiteration is proof of nothing."

"A dull, redundant dog," said the Fool.

"But to assume so much upon so little evidence!" Danvelt protested. "I am not the only Danvelt in Walcheren; possibly not the only Philip Danvelt. You cannot arrest me on so slight an assumption."

Rhynsault looked down his nose at him and smiled. Philip continued:

"But it is so easy to prove that this letter is not mine, that the writing is not mine. A score of worthy men here in Middelburg can testify to that."

"They shall be called to do so. Oh, you shall have a fair trial, never fear. And if you're innocent as you protest, you may dispel your alarm. Meanwhile, I cannot leave you at large. Fetch him along." And, turning on his heel, the governor strode out.

The pikemen ranged alongside of the merchant, who gathered courage from the governor's last words. He turned to Jan who had been a stricken witness of these proceedings.

"Jan, you will tell your mistress of this. Bid her not to be uneasy. Reassure her, Jan. You see that it is a mistake. I shall be enlarged again in a day or two when the matter is sifted."

They marched him out.

The Burgundian lieutenant sat over the remains of a generous supper, savoring with his Fool a jug of Rhenish that had been mulled and spiced. They occupied a cosy chamber adjacent to the great draughty hall of the Gravenhof. It was hung with Flemish tapestries, and lighter by a lamp suspended from the groined ceiling.

"I think," said the governor, "that we have now rounded up all the game."

This in allusion to the five arrests he had that day effected in Middelburg.

"And I think," he added, "that when these Middelburg traitors have been hanged there will be an end of plots against the government of the duke's highness, and we shall be able to take our ease."

"Amen!" said the Fool. "Our ease is what we desire above all else, whether the burghers hang or not."

"Oh, they will hang," the governor assured him.

"All the five of them?" The tone implied a doubt.

"Why not? Whom would you except?"

"Myself, none; for I cannot imagine that any of them will be missed. But there's the evidence. It may give four of them to the hangman. I've a doubt of the fifth."

"You mean Danvelt? There's his letter."

"He swears he can prove it isn't his. If he can, he goes back to his beautiful wife. Poor soul! I hope for her sake that he can't."

The governor was considering. "He demands that I send a courier to his friend, Count Anthony of Guelders. His friend, mark you. Well, that can't be done at present. The count is with the army before Liege, and will have enough to engage him. He would resent any such message, even on behalf of his friend Danvelt."

A moment later a servant came to announce the arrival of Mistress Johanna.

Rhynsault ordered her to be admitted and rose to receive her. The Fool, affecting to ignore her, took up his quill.

"It is not my custom to receive suitors at so late an hour, madam," was Rhynsault's greeting, delivered, however, without gruffness.

"I am aware of it, my lord, and grateful for the concession."

He admired her pride of bearing, the self-command which enabled her almost completely to dissemble an inevitable anxiety. He proffered a chair, which she accepted gratefully.

"A cup of Rhenish?" he invited, adding, as if in justification of this informal hospitality, "the air is chill."

"I had to brave it, my lord, in the hope of sparing my husband a night in goal. I would have come earlier, but that I was assembling these documents. They should dispel all cause that you may think you have for keeping my husband a prisoner." She proffered him a roll of parchments.

Still standing, he took them, frowning thoughtfully. "What are these,"

"Letters written by my husband."

"What have these letters to do with the matter?"

"I have brought them so that you may compare the hands and the signatures. You will see at once that the treasonable letter upon which you arrested him was not written by Philip."

"How do you know that, mistress? You haven't seen the letter upon which he was arrested."

"No; but I know that the writing cannot be the same because he never wrote any treasonable letters. He never engaged in any trason."

"Well, well," he said. "The letters shall be kept. I thank you for bringing them to me."

"As to that, my lord, it is I who shall thank you for making the comparison, and setting my husband at liberty."

"Let me warn you, mistress, not to place too much reliance upon this comparison.

She smiled confidently as she shook her head.

"I am quite sure that I have not done that."

"You love this husband?" he asked her gently.

"He is my husband, sir." She was suddenly stiff and distant.

"That does not answer my question."

"There are questions, sir, that are never answered because they should never have been asked."

"You misunderstand me, madam." He stooped towards her a little. "I ask out of concern for you."

"That same concern should have assumed the answer. If you will make the comparison for which I have brought you the means, I shall be indeed grateful."

"Oh, the comparison! The comparison!" He was a little impatient. "It shall be made. It shall be made in due season."

"In due season?" For the first time she seemed taken aback, and looked him fully in his handsome, florid face. "But why not now—at once?"

"There are inconvieniences. You will not be importunate, mistress, when I tell you that it would distress me to deny you. This is a matter for my secretaries and for the court when it comes to sit in judment."

"But if you can persuade yourself by these that no charge is possible against my husband, what need, then, for judgment? Could you not do it now, at once? So that my husband need not spend a night in goal? It is to save him this that I have labored."

The governor was properly sympathetic. There were the forms of the law which must be observed.

"Why, only today, sir," she reminded him, "you boasted in my house that you are, yourself, the law in Walcheren."

He nodded, smiling gently. "You are right to say that I boasted. I was guilty of overstatement. I am no more than the mouthpiece of the law, the channel through

What Has Happened to Justice?

BY PETER LEVINS.

The Case of the Killer in the Closet, In Which the Man's Self-Possession Saved Him From Death in the Chair.

IT seems to have been quite a long while since a Chicago murder case has appeared in this series under the heading, "When Justice Triumphed." Here is another of them and the heading is, as usual, "What Has Happened to Justice?" It is a story of a murder with considerable evidence of premeditation and motive, yet no one has gone to Illinois' little-used electric chair for the killing.

In various respects the case parallels the Snyder-Gray crime, except that the police, in this instance, could not uncover nearly as much evidence of deliberation by the man and woman who were tried.

Two factors helped the accuced pair—the woman's pregnancy and the man's remarkable self-possession on the witness stand. But for the woman's condition, she might have been convicted—not of first degree murder, for that is practically obsolete in the case of women in Chicago, but of some degree of manslaughter.

As for the second factor, the man's coolness under the fire of cross-examination won him the admiration of the jury and unquestionably influenced the verdict.

The case, to which we might give the sinister title of "The Killer in the Closet," is that one which grew out of the adulterous affair between Samuel Howard Dorr, dapper insurance agent, and his neighbor and tenant, Mrs. Genevieve O'Brien.

Dorr, 37 years old, lived with his wife, Rose, and their two children, a 6-year-old boy and 2-year-old girl, in a two-family house he owned on South Maplewood avenue, Chicago. Above them, in an apartment with exactly the same arrangement of rooms, lived William O'Brien, 25, and his wife, Genevieve, 23.

The O'Briens had been married four years. Bill O'Brien, a great hulk of a man, weighing 276 pounds, worked nights as a street car conductor and days as a clerk in the county recorder's office.

It was an ambitious routine, but O'Brien wanted to have some money in the bank by the time the baby was born. He got home from the car job at 3 a. m. and then had to get up at 7:30 for the other job. He managed to get some sleep between times in the late afternoon or early evening. He slept in a room of his own so as not to disturb his wife.

Families Were on Very Friendly Terms.

"I guess I can stand it for these few months," he told friends. "You can't kill a big horse like me."

The two families were on very friendly terms. Dorr sold some life insurance to O'Brien, amounting to several thousands of dollars. Mrs. Dorr showed Genevieve how to make baby clothes and often brought her pies and cakes she had baked.

"She's a wonderful woman," said O'Brien on several occasions. "But he's a great guy himself. I never struck a smarter man than Sam. He sure can talk insurance!"

Bill O'Brien talked a lot about the coming baby and joked with his wife about whether the youngster would have her curly red hair, and whether the child would be a "big elephant" like him or petite and delicate like Genevieve.

But Bill O'Brien never lived to see that baby.

On the morning of November 20, 1929, he was assassinated in his own home. He was shot four times and died the night of the 21st. Before he died he named Dorr as his slayer, at the same time implicating Genevieve O'Brien in what the police took to be a deliberate plot. He may not have meant to implicate his wife, but that was the effect.

If O'Brien had died instantly or without regaining consciousness, Dorr might never have been involved, for Mrs. O'Brien at first insisted that she had fired the shots. During hours of questioning she stuck to her story, not knowing that her dying husband had named Dorr. She said that she had shot Bill because he had been cruel and abusive.

"Who was your lover?" the police asked her many times. But she would admit nothing on that score.

Then Deputy Commissioner John Stege, in charge of the detective division, took Mrs. O'Brien back to the scene of the tragedy, to the room where Bill O'Brien had customarily slept, and directed her to show him exactly what had happened. How, for instance, had she fired the shots? How did she hold the gun?

Mrs. O'Brien promptly put her finger over the trigger guard instead of over the trigger.

And where did she stand when she fired the shots?

"Here," she said, standing in the center of the room.

But Stege knew otherwise. He had found powder marks on the door jamb of the clothes closet. The marks were higher than they would have been had the slim and diminutive Genevieve fired the gun.

"Mrs. O'Brien," said Stege, "it is quite useless for you to continue with this story of yours. We know it isn't true. We know Dorr fired the shots, because your husband has told us so."

"No, no! He had nothing to do with it! I tell you I did it! I couldn't stand my husband's treatment any longer!"

But at last, after seventeen hours, she broke down. She said that she had fired some of the shots and that Dorr had fired some. She later changed this, saying Dorr had fired all the shots. She admitted she and Dorr had been intimate for months.

She said that Dorr had been taking her out in his car since the previous March, but insisted that their relations did not become "serious" until August. She also insisted that the child she was expecting would be O'Brien's child and not Dorr's.

She told of meeting Dorr the night before the murder, of leaving him a block from the house, and later letting him in the rear entrance to her apartment. They sat together in the living room, playing the radio and discussing the serious problem they had on their hands. The state later held that this problem was the matter of getting rid of O'Brien. Mrs. O'Brien held that the problem so far as she was concerned had to do only with how they might both gain their freedom.

"It Can't Go On Like This."

The following, in the form of questions put to her by police officials, and her answers, is from her confession, read to the jury during Dorr's trial, and admitted as evidence in her trial as well:

Q.—And then did you go to bed? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—And how long after did he go to bed? A.—Not very long after.

Q.—What conversation did you have? A.—We had been talking all evening and he kept saying this can't go on like this, it can't go on like this, and I told him it could not, either.

Q.—He said it could not go on, either? A.—Yes, because he was not getting along with Rose—Mrs. Dorr.

Q.—Go head. A.—During the evening when we did sit up there, he said he would have to do something about it.

Q.—Well, what did he say he would have to do? A.—Oh, he could not get along without me and he didn't want to be sneaking around.

Q.—Well, what did he say he was going to do? A.—We would have to get rid of him some way or another.

Q.—Did he suggest any way of doing it? A.—Not last night, but last week, when I took lysol, he said he was not going to have me acting like that, if he had to get rid of both of them, if he had to kill both of them, meaning his wife and my husband.

She said that Dorr left her bedroom on the morning of the murder while she talked with her husband who was shaving in the bathroom. The bathroom led off the narrow passageway which connected the two bedrooms. She said she returned to her bedroom, heard the first shot, and opened her door. As she did so, she saw her husband rush out of his room, crying that some one was trying to shoot at him.

According to the testimony introduced at Dorr's trial, Genevieve O'Brien said then, "O, that is only an electric light bulb."

O'Brien returned to his bedroom, according to the testimony, but whether he believed the fantastic electric light bulb explanation, or whether he returned to seek out his assailant, no one knows. At any rate, Dorr, who had hidden in the clothes closet, stepped out into the room and fired a second shot, which struck O'Brien.

The late William O'Brien, the man whom Dorr killed.

Samuel Howard Dorr, the insurance agent who killed William O'Brien after an affair with O'Brien's wife.

Mrs. Genevieve O'Brien, widow of the slain man, whose affair with Dorr was the cause of it all.

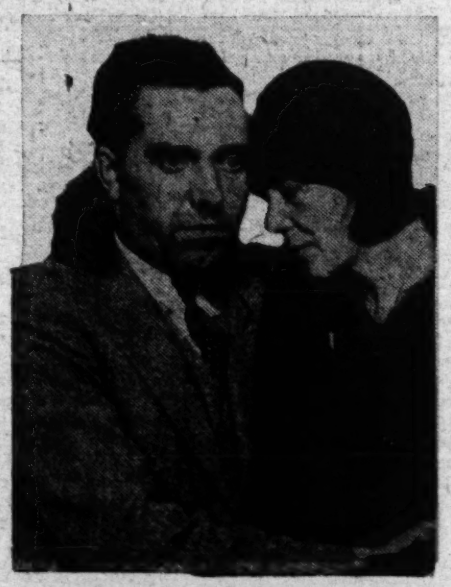

The wounded man rushed out, followed by Dorr. A third shot. O'Brien crumpled to the floor of the stair landing, and as he lay there, pleading for his life, Dorr fired his fourth and last shot.

A rather horrible picture, all in all. It recalls the ghastly bludgeon of Albert Snyder as he say in his bed that frightful night in Queens Village. In one respect, this Chicago case seems worse, for Snyder may never have known what hit him.

Mrs. O'Brien in her confession stated that after the shooting, she took the weapon from Dorr when Mrs. Dorr came upstairs and rubbed her hands over it so that only her fingerprints would be on the gun. She admitted that, in a further effort to shield Dorr, she went to her husband and told him she was sorry she had shot him.

Another Snyder-Gray parallel—

According to the police, passion for the woman had not been Dorr's sole reason for killing O'Brien. They held that he had craved the other man's $7,500 insurance. Later the authorities discovered that Dorr had been $2,500 short in his insurance accounts. He had, according to the police, needed that much money to save himself.

It's good-by now. Mrs. Dorr gives her husband a last pathetic embrace before he's taken away to prison.

When Mrs. O'Brien had completed her confession and signed it, the document was shown to Dorr and he was advised, for his own sake, to make a full confession himself. He soon saw the wisdom of this. He admitted that he had fired the shots but denied that the crime had been premeditated. In his trial, as we shall see, he held that the shooting was all an accident.

Unfortunately, police departments in this country are usually more than satisfied if they can exact a confession from an accused person. It is a practice with the police and district attorneys to make bargains with their prisoners, the final result being that the state wins a conviction while the defendant beats the death penalty. This practice is by no means limited to any one section or city.

Chicago, however, is regarded as the worst offender in this respect. The electric chair there might just as well be in the Field museum.

Mrs. Dorr stuck to her husband, blaming everything on the other woman. When the coroner's jury, meeting in a somber funeral chapel, returned a verdict holding Dorr and Mrs. O'Brien, the accused man's wife jumped from her chair, screaming and weeping, and tried to fling herself upon the slim, black-garbed woman standing a few feet away.

"Murderess!" she cried. "You are responsible for all this!"

Then, as officers held her, she reviled the young widow. "Look at me! Look at me!" she screamed. "You stained my home, my beautiful babies! You will be punished!"

Mrs. O'Brien's attorneys, Charles S. Dougherty and Samuel A. Hoffman, demanded a separate trial for her and won their plea. A break in her favor.

The trial of the insurance agent started January 2, 1930.

Dorr's bearing in court was exceedingly calm and self-assured. His wife, who had told her children that "daddy was at a convention," sat near by, her eyes riveted on him.

Behind the railing in the courtroom sat the dead man's parents and brother, Mrs. O'Brien's father, and other relatives were also present.

Mrs. O'Brien's Confession Ordered in Evidence.

The state first offered in evidence O'Brien's own statement, naming Dorr. The defense objected strenuously, but the statement was admitted. Then police officers testified as to the arrests, the discoveries at the scene, the statements by Mrs. O'Brien and Dorr, and the re-enactment of the crime by the two accused. Finally, the state offered in evidence the confession of the woman.

Naturally, the defense fought against this with all the arguments they could find, for Mrs. O'Brien's confession was an extremely damaging statement. But in the end this, too, was admitted

When the state rested, things looked pretty black for Samuel Dorr. The evidence showing premeditation seemed rather overwhelming.

He admitted firing the shots, but said they were accidental. He had interceded between O'Brien and his wife as they quarreled, he said, and while trying to make peace, he had wrested th gun from O'Brien to make sure the other man would not shoot it.

Then, while he was struggling to take the gun, it went off accidentally. They continued to scuffle for possession of the weapon, he said, and two more shots were fired. Accidentally? O, yes.

This is more or less a standard story in such cases where there have been no eyewitnesses, but Dorr told it with all the appearance of relating the absolute truth, as though it were something that had never happened to any one before, much less ever been told before. His manner was one of perfect poise. He was suave, cool, even cheerful.

He addressed the jurors with the stage presence of an experienced after-dinner speaker. It was as though the jury and the general public had gathered a wrong impression about what had happened, and he was clearing everything up. Of course, things had looked rather bad, but he had taken matters philosophically, like a good sport. He was sure the juror would understand.

Chattily he told of the ideal relations existing between him and O'Brien, between Mrs. Dorr and Mrs. O'Brien. Himself he pictured as an idealist, a peacemaker, anxious to see that the family life of his tenant and friend—meaning O'Brien—was as perfect as his own. One gathered that he had even coached O'Brien in the role he himself had shone in—the role of perfect husband.

The case went to the jury January 18. Throngs waited in the courtroom and corridors while the jury studied the evidence.

ROSE CULTURE

SO FAR this spring, the weather has been fairly good for the proper growth of roses. Roses that were planted in February and the early part of April suffered a bit from the long dry spell that lasted for several weeks, but since that time there has been an abundance of water. This unusually wet weather has been quite a boon to the early worms and they have multiplied by the tens of thousands. Hardly a day goes by that we do not hear about bugs on roses.

The cultivation of roses is of the utmost importance. This is so very true in the case of the rose because of the immense quality of food that is necessary for their blooming. They are such prolific bloomers, and for each bloom that appears that much food the plant has taken from the soil. In order for the plant to be able to take this food from the ground the top of the ground should be loose and porous at all times. This not only aerates the soil, but also tends to hold the moisture. After each shower the rose beds should be cultivated, not deeply, but thoroughly.

Not long ago we were reading an article about the care and cultivation of roses and the author used a phrase that has stuck in our minds. It was something like this: "I have observed that thorough cultivation at frequent intervals is better than watering—." There is much truth in that statement. The thorough, often repeated cultivation, which keeps the top two inches of the soil dry and dusty, keeps the ground from crusting and baking, but the greatest virtue lies in the fact that the soil does not dry out completely. As a matter of fact, the sub-soil stays filled with water. This soil stirring after each rain not only keeps the plants growing properly, but at the same time keeps down all of the weeds that are constantly springing up. Remember that weeds will use as much or more food than the rose plants, and very few weeds are a thing of beauty that should be fed and cherished.

The summer food that must be supplied in order that the rose may grow to its usual perfection is of the utmost importance. Roses are heavy feeders and if you want to err, be certain to err on the heavy side. Give them lots of food, applying it at frequent intervals. There isn't anything better than well rotted stable manure. As a substitute for this, and it is hard to find in a city, we would suggest a mixture of the commercial sheep manure and bone meal. We realize that these are old-fashioned fertilizers not highly advertised, but they are hard to beat. A light application of some good high grade commercial fertilizer about once each month will help tremendously. This latter is particularly true during the heavy blooming season, during the early part of the summer.

The rose is a most unselfish plant and might well be an example for all of us. It responds to generosity with more generosity. It seems that for every blossom that is cut from a plant, at least two take that one's place. On the other hand, if the roses are not cut as fast as they appear, the plant seems to dwarf itself and stop blooming as well as growing.

There is only one thing that should be kept in mind when cutting roses. Use a knife that is razor-sharp or, better still, use a pair of scissors or pruning shears. Cut the roses with real long stems, just as long as is possible and still leave two leaves at the base. This cutting, which is so beneficial, helps to give the plant the proper pruning that should be its due all through the summer. After a bit of experience at this pleasant task of cutting roses, the latest amateur will fast learn to shape the plant as this pruning is carried on.

Some of you will want to raise large flowers and this may be done by "disbudding." This, of course, will decrease the number of flowers that will appear on the plant. The proper method of disbudding is to pinch off the buds as fast as they appear, except for the one or two that you desire to allow to bloom. I have never been able to do this, but a great many other people enjoy the sacrifice of the large number of flowers for a few exceptional ones.

Each year that passes finds the subject of bugs an easier one to talk about, for each year there are new remedies for our old enemies and life becomes shorter and shorter for them.

Our oldest friend among the bugs is the aphis. They have had a wonderful time this spring, for they delight in cool, damp weather. There are several different kinds of aphides, but they confine themselves to two colors, pink and green. They are usually first found underneath the leaves, and there they sit and suck the life from the plants. The first evidence of their visit is that the plant seems to droop during the middle of the day, the leaves are not as green as they should be, and the plant looks sickly. These lice reproduce with amazing rapidity and soon will cover the entire plant if they are not controlled immediately.

It is fortunate indeed that these aphides, plant lice or green flies, as they are sometimes called, are easily controlled. There are several methods by which this control may be affected. The oldest method, and also a most satisfactory one, is by the use of nicotine sulphate. The usual strength used is a 40 per cent solution, this usually travels under the commercial name of Black Leaf Forty. This should be diluted a great deal, one teaspoonful will make a gallon of spray. It is a good plan to add about one ounce of whale oil, or common laundry soap to this mixture. This is done in order that the solution will stick to the leaves in a better manner. This spraying should be carried on with a great deal of thoroughness, every square inch of the plant should be thoroughly soaked. Particular care should be taken that the tips of the leaves and the buds be thoroughly sprayed.

Another method, more of a prevention than a cure, although this method will kill the aphis after a couple of applications, is by the use of tobacco. A mulch of tobacco stems is placed around the plants, this being done usually early in the spring. The plants themselves are given a thorough dusting with tobacco dust early in the morning while the dew is still on the plants. This, of course, is done that the dust will stick on the plants.

Pink Killarney Rose

The third method followed, the latest method and probably the most satisfactory of the three methods generally followed, is by spraying with a pyrethrum spray. Pyrethrum, like nicotine sulphate, is a contact spray and care should be taken that every bit of the plant is thoroughly soaked. A great advantage of this pyrethrum spray over the old-fashioned nicotine sulphate spray is that pyrethrum is non-poisonous, while the black leaf forty is poisonous. One teaspoonful will make one gallon of spray and it is well to use about one ounce of fish oil soap added to each gallon of spray. This soap is generally referred to as the spreader and is used so that the spray will stick to the plant with greater ease and effectiveness. May we repeat, for emphasis, that the pyrethrum spray is non-poisonous, so there is no danger for the baby, the dog and the cat, if this spray is kept around the house.

There is another little pest that makes an annual visit to the rose garden. This gentleman travels under the name of "Rose Curculio." He never eats a full meal, but dines only on desert, the rosebud itself. After the buds have been attacked, they sometimes fail to open, if it so happens that the bud opens most of the petals will be punctured and will have a yellowish tinge. The eggs are laid in these holes and it is well to burn these punctured bolls as soon as they are found.

The only effective control for these little pests is arsenate of lead. This may be applied in the dust form or by the liquid method. If the dusting method is followed, this dusting should be carried on in the early morning while the dew is on the plants. One teaspoonful of arsenate of lead will make up about two gallons of spray, in case you follow the liquid method of application. In the great majority of cases, the liquid method is much to be preferred.

There are two diseases that give us trouble on our roses here in Atlanta, these being mildew and black spot. Mildew is commonly found on the Dorothy Perkins roses and also found on a great many of the bush roses. Dorothy Perkins is such a sinner about attracting mildew that most people are pulling them up by the roots and throwing the old sister away, then replacing it with some stronger brother. The rest of the roses may be saved without a great deal of trouble and are worth saving.

Mildew is a surface disease and therefore easily controlled. The American Rose Society highly recommends two methods of control, Fungtrogen and Massey Dust. Fungtrogen is the commercial name for ammonical copper-carbonate solution. This is always applied in a liquid spray. Massey dust is sold under a number of commercial names, but is composed of nine parts of dusting sulphur and one part of arsenate of lead. To make this dust even more effective, add one part of tobacco dust, thereby controlling, through the one dusting, mildew rose curculio and aphides. The sulphur will cure the mildew, the arsenate of lead, the rose curculio and the powdered tobacco, the aphides.

The black spot is harder to control and cure than the mildew, but this may be done by starting before the appearance of the disease or at the first indication. Black spot is hard to control because of the fact that it is a bacterial growth within the leaf itself. Tht control is simple; clean up all of the dead and fallen leaves and burn them. As the leaves become infected, pick them from the plant and burn them as well. Dust the plant thoroughly with Massey Dust once every 10 days. Remember, black spot is difficult to control. Promptness and thoroughness are essential.

I have just read over what has been written and it is certainly very discouraging; fertilizers, bugs and diseases. The first thing in the morning I intend to pick a beautiful rosebud and forget all about the unpleasant parts of growing roses. As a parting suggestion, may I ask that you not take this too seriously? Roses have been blooming beautifully this spring and will probably continue to do so throughout the summer. Try a bit of prevention in your garden of roses and discourage the bugs and diseases.

WHAT TO PLANT IN JUNE

VEGETABLE SEED—Cauliflower, celery, cucumber, cowpeas, Gherkins, gourds, pumpkins, New Zealand spinach, squash and crowder peas.

MELONS—This is a fine month for planting all kinds of melons, both watermelons and the late varieties of cantaloupes.

VEGETABLE PLANTS—Tomato, pepper, eggplant, cabbage and collard plants may now be set out for fall use. Sweet potato plants may be started now.

BEDDING PPLANTS—This is a good time to fill in the vacancies in your porch and window boxes.

FLOWERING BULBS—Gladiolus bulbs may be planted all through June. This is probably the best month for planting dahlias, especially for fall blossoms. Tube roses, Cannas and Caladiums may now be planted.

LAWNS—A good thorough fertilization of the lawn should be made now in order that a good root system will be grown for protection through the summer drought that usually occurs during August or early September. Bermuda lawns may be started now either from the seeds or from the roots. For the best results with your lawn, cut it at least once each week, whether it seems to need it or not.

Major Alexander M. Lochwitzky, U. S. A., Scion Ancient Polish Family, Describes Startling Adventures in Forgotten Siberia—Famous Soldier, Who Lectured at Harvard, Won Legion of Honor Cross in China

By Anthony Wayne

IF THIS were played upon a stage now, I would condemn it as an improbable fiction."

Shakespeare thus puts into the mouth of Fabian in his Twelfth Night a phrase that fits as a text, or as a preamble, the experience of a loyal and adopted son of Uncle Sam, Alexander de Lochwitzky, Russian count, spy, intelligence chief, fugitive, exile, university lecturer, linguist, engineer and soldier.

The World War has turned upside down the lives of many individuals. Many born to rule, educated to carry on the traditions of a famous family have found themselves without friends, without their fortunes, outcasts. A few have accepted the gauntlet of fate and have fought it out in the arena, unwilling to live on charity, seeking only to wrest from a heartless world a measure of success.

Out of the welter of European upheavals there has come a quiet spoken man, a Russian noble by birth, born to rule, but experiencing instead almost every misfortune. Willing to fight it out under a dozen adverse conditions he emerges as another example of man's courage.

Alexander M. Lochwitzky lives quietly just across the Potomac from the national capital. Tomorrow he may be in China in the turmoil of Oriental affairs. Change and chance are his playfellows and he accepts them as companions. Possibly his acceptance is forced after a decade or two of close association with these fickle, light-hearted and frequently cruel scoundrels.

Nothing Impossible.

"Nothing is impossible for a Lochwitzky," says this member of a proud old Russian family, with a smile. He has found it true enough in his own case. Born a count of Luxembourg he was lieutenant colonel in the Russian army in the days when Czar Nicholas II was ruling that troubled empire. With great estates, wealth, and a democratic spirit he started out as a young man to live up to the motto given him by his father: "Duty is the great mountain-road to God," and "Doing nothing for others is the undoing of ourselves."

There are cynics who would claim that such principles brought him all his troubles. Apparently Major Lochwitzky, for such is his rank as bestowed by Uncle Sam, has had the opportunity to contemplate on the thought. He has rejected the cynics' version, however, he says, "this old family motto is still mine."

The former count has that reverence for his family so common among Europeans of his class. He meditates on his father's suggestion even to this day.

As a young man he specialized in languages, Latin, Greek, French, German and his own native literature. He early received his B. A. and added to it a L. L. D. from the General Gourevich College and special honors from the famous Cavalry School of the Emperor—the Russian West Point.

Founded Own School.

But having a democratic leaning and wishing to forestall trouble then brewing, he founded with his own money a rural school which he located about three hours by rail from Petrograd. There he hired government teachers and prepared to give to the peasants the benefits of educational training.

It was here that his adventures began. Spies from the government distorted his motives and reported that he was teaching socialism. Although having many friends among the royal governing family his democratic leanings made him a marked man at a time when everything in Russia was reactionary.

On false charges he was arrested and taken to the great fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul. Confident that his friends would help him he awaited a quick release. But national affairs were out of control of his people. He was placed in solitary confinement. Even his own family were kept from seeing him. Help did not come and for sixteen months he never saw the face of a single person.

In the changing world outside tragedy was stalking. His wife unable to communicate with him died of sorrow. His own father, then old and feeble, likewise passed away. A son born after his imprisonment never saw his own parent.

During this time the Russian Bastile had swallowed him up. He might have been a man in an iron mask. He might well have been dead as his enemies hoped he would be. Or possibly so broken in health and spirit that he would be sent to some insane asylum.

His food was passed through a narrow slit in a great oak door. But no other word reached him. In his cell he stayed without knowledge or word of the world outside. To guard against losing his mind from solitude and silence he spent his time reviewing the studies that he remembered when in college. With a bone that happened to come in with his food he wrote on the walls of his cell, working out problems.

Then after sixteen months he was brought into the light of day.

There was no adequate proof of the charges. His enemies could do no more than arrange that he should be sentenced to Siberia on presumption of guilt. As a political exile he went to the dreaded Island of Saghalin, long noted as the worst spot in the Russian empire, where the winter was 200 days long and every sort of criminal congregated and graft was rampant. There were more than 25,000 outlaws in that lonely place.

But because Lochwitzky knew several languages he was made a teacher in the school, an irony of inconsistency, since it was on the presumption that he had favored the teaching of socialism that he was exiled.

In addition he was made a "doctor." Without knowledge of medicine he administered to the desperate needs of the outlaws. He treated broken bones, diseases of all kinds, plagues and communicable ones. He even handled child births. During those four years, he said, "I never lost a patient."

His natural love of learning and a keen ability to understand those with whom he was in contact made it possible for him to obtain an appointment, after four years, to Vladivostock, Siberia. On a parole, he became associated with the United States consul and secured a position as secretary of a piping company. The British consul became friendly and offered him a secretaryship. In this work he often acted as vice-consul and liaison officer.

But while fortune seemed to be smiling, his luck again changed. His enemies were still watching him. Seeing his progress and jealous of the fact that he was achieving a financial success through his engineering knowledge and ability to understand the languages and the people, an anonymous letter was sent to the gendarme colonel at Vladivostock which sought to have him sent back to Saghalin Island "for socialistic leanings."

Called before his superior officer and an explanation demanded, the Russian nobleman resorted to flattery to save himself.

"Why, colonel," said the count, after reading the letter which was shown him, "you don't mean to tell me that you, a high official of the Russian government, would believe anything contained in an anonymous letter such as this! It is merely petty jealousy of some unknown person."

His Trump Card.

It was a trump card. The Russian colonel leaned back in his chair and swelled with pride.

"To be sure not," he answered after thought. "I just called you in to let you know about it and to warn you that you have enemies at work."

But the end was not yet. While immediately relieved, he was watched. Everywhere he went there were spies to report his every word and act. Nothing was too small or insignificant. The least suspicious act was observed in the hope of sending him back.

It was then that Lochwitzky determined to escape. Taking the British consul into his plans he staged a dinner party in a restaurant. Then pleading an errand forgotten he sought to leave through the kitchen. Bribing the cook he endeavored to escape over the wall at the back. Just as he jumped over the fence in his dash toward the harbor, where he hoped to board a foreign ship, two watchers darted toward him. They too had corrupted the restaurant cooks.

It was time for action. With a blow he knocked out the one who sprang for him. The other drew his revolver to fire, but the gun was entangled in the holster and the moment was long enough so that he gained a carriage near by. Here the driver was urged to take him toward the wharf. But he dared not to go all the way in the public conveyance. He dived out of the carriage and into the dark alleys making his way toward the lights in the harbor.

He found a Chinese in a rowboat and after an agony of suspense persuaded him to row him to a Japanese boat then riding at anchor. The coolie mistook the instruction and started toward a Russian boat. There was more action while he himself rowed toward the Japanese passenger ship. Swinging up its rope ladder he ran into the arms of two Russian officers of the consul's department.

Quick Wit Saves Him.

Quick wit again saved him for he pretended to be foreigner and since his fellow countrymen were the worse for several drinks he succeeded. Again it was necessary to bribe the authorities. The boat's captain this time was persuaded to hide him in a tiny box-like compartment. There he stayed, half-suffocated for long hours waiting for the boat to sail. It wasn't until the officers left that he was able to get out.

Once in Japan he communicated with the British consul and received certain sums of money still owing him from Siberia, on account. Fearing to travel further he settled down to wait, teaching in the meantime. At this time he studied Cantonese and became familiar with the ways of the Boxers, opium-smugglers and the underworld of the Orient. He had a purpose in view and that was to reach China.

Finally he believed that his ill-luck had passed and he went across the channel to take charge of military expedition against certain Chinese outlaws. The influence of the British helped him. He discovered though, that all those who had held this new position had been murdered.

By the help of the French and British he secured foreign troops to bolster his Chinese company and cleaned out the Boxers. But in the doing of it he received what was meant for a fatal wound, a great knife gash in his neck. Carried 60 miles to the nearest hospital he awoke from a life and death struggle to hear that he had been awarded the Cross of the Legion of Honor by the French government for his bravery and success in that region.

It was then that he determined to leave the Orient and try his fortune in America and so left for San Francisco, taking with him Oriental merchandise with which to rehabilitate himself. But fortune frowned. There came the great earthquake and fire and wiped out his financial reserve and his carefully imported material.

Still unwilling to accept defeat he went to Los Angeles where he co-operated with the criminal courts in running down Russians who broke the law and in gathering dangerous evidence in dope smuggling and white slave traffickers and counterfeiters.

His success brought him an appointment in Salt Lake City. It was at this time that he definitely forsook his Russian citizenship and cast in his lot in America by taking out his citizenship papers. At last he believed he was in a land where he could have freedom of thought and action.

Because of his educational attainments he spent a number of years on the lecture platform. He talked on Russia, and on the Far East. Three times, he spoke on request at Yale University and at Chicago University, at Cornell, Harvard and Vassar. At these and other places more than 2,000,000 listened to him.

He determined to enter the United States army and was able to secure appointment by President Wilson to be a captain in the quartermaster corps. He passed first the examination.

During Mexican difficulties along our border he served in the intelligence department on special assignment, a place peculiarly fitted to his abilities. He won high recommendations in letters which he specially prizes to this day.

During the World War he continued in this branch of the service with the rank of major. He was stationed at Fort Sam Houston and Kelly field, Texas. While on duty he noticed that a certain staff sergeant showed considerable interest in the society of the wives of the officers. The young man paid no attention to the girls and those of his own age but danced with wives of the higher officials.

Spy Executed.

Taking with him a man who could pick locks he visited the inquisitive one's hotel room when he knew that he would be undisturbed in a careful search. Going over the room carefully Major Lochwitzky found nothing upon which to bring a charge. Then just before leaving he looked under the bed to see a pile of soiled clothes. He kicked into the lot to discover that there was a locked chest beneath them. Opening the chest he found a number of documents which when read with a glass that was also concealed in the metal box proved beyond doubt that the sergeant had been securing military information of the utmost value which he had been sending across the border for transmission to Germany.

The spy was executed.

After the war Major Lochwitzky tried his hand as a prohibition officer, and in the smuggling service watching for those who sought to bring in diamonds and contraband. He also served as translator for the bureau of public roads, and helped in the army medical library as a scholar of foreign languages.

Now the tenacious major is expecting to go to China for special service. Due to the fact that he speaks easily, Russian, Slavonian, French, Spanish, German, Czech, Bulgarian, Japanes and Chinese Mandarin, he expects to have a busy time in the Far East.

Romance has not entirely passed by this Russian count. Upstanding, independent, good looking, it is no wonder that he is again married. This time to a Czechoslovakian Red Cross nurse. But not until his future was assured in America did he consider this step.

Looking over a lifetime of strange experiences, Major Lochvitzky still adheres to the motto of his family which emphasizes "devotion to duty." In fact President Roosevelt publicly stated that he was a notable example of such devotion, plus "bulldog tenacity and honesty."

The man who has fought, bled, escaped from many countries is happy in the fact that whatever the fates held in store, he is safe in his choice of citizenship, now that he is an American.

Fort Hood and the Ponders House

ber plant. Miss Huff states there was even a lodge or gate-house, and this is sufficiently British, in all conscience. Any visitor to the charming old residence of Miss Sarah Huff on Huff road, Howell station, will be shown two elegant boxwood trees in the front yard; Miss Sarah will proudly inform the said visitor that they came from the garden of the Ponders Mansion!

Here was an English country estate engrafted upon the feudal system of the south. The negro quarters were in keeping with the rest, and Marietta road was the dusty, muddy highway over which the family carriage went to and from town. Cityward the prancing team began to reach city thoroughfares when Hunnicutt street was passed, and toward Five Points the highway widened out to imposing proportions near Kile's corner, the present locus of the new William-Oliver building.

Before the dawn of July 22, Stewart's corps left their trenches between Brookwood station and Crestlawn cemetery, and silently marched south and southeast via Marietta road, Howell Mill road, and Hemphill avenue, to the new line. Walthall's division occupied the Fort Wood sector. The 20th Corps' pickets near Collier's road, were not long in discovering the vacancy in their front, and shortly after the brazen July sun had lit up the valley of Tanyard branch, Geary's division was moving southward over the broken ground, some of which to this day is still a wilderness. For better going, Geary swung to the right with two of his brigades, after passing the abandoned line, and along Howell Mill road traced the footsteps of the retreating defenders. At Marietta street a sharp skirmish took place, the Confederate pickets being driven into the fortifications. At 10 a. m. General Hooker ordered Geary to form on a cleared ridge running a half mile east of the Howell Mill and Marietta road intersection. This placed him at the western terminus of Eighth street, and on a line a little north of east, crossing Tenth, near State street. This was Geary's position during the siege of Atlanta, and he remained here until August 25.

Geary was confronted by the frowning bastions of Fort Wood, and the lines north of the Ponders House; he was 1,000 yards from them. Within two hours Geary's men had erected sizable breastworks, and on certain commanding points heavy field artillery was rolled up. Geary was exactly two miles from the Union depot. To the left was Ward's division; commanding a brigade there was a gentleman from Indiana, Colonel Benjamin Harrison, who doubtless got his boots very muddy in the swampy purlieus of Tanyard branch.

Fortunately General Geary has left posterity a very readable account of his part in the siege of Atlanta, and since he was posted opposite Fort Wood and the Ponders House, his report cannot fail to interest us here. The report is dated September 15, and was doubtless written in some comfortable domicile in the city, surrounded by the quiet of an undisturbed garrison.

General Geary must have taken pains to learn the name of the owner of the large stucco covered brick house that loomed up so conspicuously over the intrenchad rifle pits that culminated in the huge sand bag batteries fronted by the picturesque and formidable chervaux de frise. And Geary records the name correctly—Mrs. Ponders. From this, and other references, we understand that by the time of the siege, at any rate, Mrs. Ponders was a widow. Miss Sarah Huff, 66 years after the events here described, informed the writer that even while Mr. Ponders was living, it was Mrs. Ponders who presided as chatelaine. She it was who wore the keys. Whether or not the keeper of the castle and its elaborate entourage remained long enough to see it transformed into a moated grange is not of record. Certainly no one was at home after the muzzles of the 20th Corps artillery peeped over the red earth banks at Eighth street. But the house was occupied, for all that! The vigilant defenders of the lines placed sharpshooters in the upper rooms of the big house with a blanket order to pick off any and all artillerymen who showed a head above the newly built parapets. Now it has never failed to happen that just such a state of affairs is not permitted to last longer than is necessary. As in the instance of the York House up on the Burnt Hickory road, when that beautiful residence, lately Johnston's headquarters, filled up with federal sharp-shooters, the Confederate gunners of Loring's Corps on Kenesaw, reduced it to ashes by firing cannon balls brought to a red glow in log fires back of the works! So when several dozen muskets began blazing away at the Eighth street hill, from Mrs. Ponders' back bedroom windows, the inevitable results followed. Geary's gunners were mere flesh and blood, and their belching cannon returned an answer to the snipers, and what they did to that beautiful residence began to be recorded for all time when Photographer George M. Barnard set up his tripod on the adjacent parapets!

From out there along Eighth street, the 20th Corps artillerymen must have had a good view of the house. Its gleaming white walls embowered in trees made it most conspicuous. The brick kitchen did not hide the nine second-story windows, nor the "observatory" on top. Northward, the ground fell away rapidly, cut athwart by the palisaded trenches and the spiked obstructions. One of those artillerymen who wrecked the house tells of it in his report. Captain Charles E. Winegar commanded Battery I, First New York artillery. His report is as laconic as tacitus:

"On the morning of the 24th (July) were ordered to open on a large stone house in our front and burn it, if possible. Although every projectile thrown struck the building it proved impossible to communicate fire to it; distance, about 1,050 yards. Loss, killed, one horse. Ammunition expended, 72 rounds."

And later:

"August 3, fired at Widow Ponders' (he spells it Sander's) house, expending 30 rounds."

This accounts for at least 102 shots, anyway. Winegar must have thought it all stone, and it's safe to declare that this was probably the only house in Georgia that Sherman didn't burn! The structure was of heavy brick walls, covered with stucco, as the white, pitted surface indicates, but just why the roof and interior woodwork failed to ignite is not known; it certainly was not due to bad marksmanship! Another writer states that nearly a ton of shot and shell was found in the house after the seige!

But it must be remembered that the defenders had artillery as well. They had mounted huge guns on the board platforms, and Geary carefully notes that he was saluted with 64-pound shells of the James projectile pattern!

During the week of July 22, Geary and Walthall exchanged bloody compliments daily. Each brazen day saw a federal outpost pushed nearer and a new line of works erected. The afternoon of the 22d, while McPherson was battling Hardee and Cheatham over on the east side, Geary's artillery was trained on the city, and until late that night the unmitigated horrors of City Hall square (now the state capitol), where the wounded lay ranked upon the dusty sward, were increased by bursting shells from north of the city.

On the 27th the army of the Tennessee, now in command of Howard, marched to the rear of Geary, moving to the west side of the city—leaving behind them the torn forest and earth-strewn debris of the Atlanta battlefield, where McPherson had made his last ride. Howard, his successor, was pushing on to his first victory as army commander, and leaving behind him a very much disgruntled officer who wanted to succeed McPherson. General Hooker, commander of the 20th Corps, had once been an army leader, and this same Howard had been a corps commander under him. Hooker's disastrous defeat at Chancellorsville and the smashing of Howard's Eleventh Corps by Stonewall Jackson, was all past history, but the pompous New Yorker was quite certain that the coveted leadership of the Tennessee army should be his. And it might have been had not Hooker sent a foolish dispatch to Sherman the evening after the battle of Kolb's Farm, near Kenesaw, June 22, which message so infuriated the irratible Sherman that he was glad to ignore Hooker on any pretext!

So Geary records that on this same 27th of July his corps commander, Major General Joseph Hooker, was relieved at his own request, and departed the service forever. The senior division commander, Williams, temporarily succeeded him. It was on the 28th that Geary noticed the big 64-pound shells from Fort Wood, and also the thunder of heavy artillery and musketry from the southwest. That was the conflict at Ezra church, where Howard was fighting a defensive battle at Mozley Park, against the third and last sortie of General Wood.

It was not until 4 p. m. of August 10 that Geary succeeded in opening fire with some real siege artillery. These were 4 1-2-inch guns, and the firing was kept up all night. Confederate deserters began to creep into his lines, telling tales of a shell-torn city. On Saturday afternoon, August 13, a concentrated and continuous firing was begun all along the line, and lasted all night. At 11 p. m. huge flames mounted aloft and the turmoil and hub-bub were audible even unto the 20th Corps lines. The lurid flames continued until daylight, only to be succeeded the night of the 14th by another conflagration. Coincidently, these two fires were reported a day or so later by a federal spy who was in the city at the time—J. Milton Glass—was making frequent visits within the walls, and in his reports he states that the first fire was at Marietta and Walton, a warehouse full of cotton, and a drug store; the other one a neighboring business building.

The cannonading was kept up daily until August 25. No heavy line assaults were made on the north front. Sherman had long since realized that so long as two railroads were running supplies in and prisoners out of Atlanta, there could be no siege proper, so he picked up his army and marched them southward to Fairburn and Jonesboro—all of his army excepting the 20th Corps. Williams was ordered out of the siege line the night of the 25th, and Geary silently departed for Pace's Ferry on the Chattahoochee river, where he with the other two divisions to the southward, guarded the Western and Atlantic railroad and the river passages as far south of the Mayson-Turner ferry. After the destruction of the Atlanta and West Point and the Macon and Western railroads, followed by the Battle of Jonesboro, Atlanta was abandoned. So it was the troops of the 20th Corps who, on the morning of September 2, passed through their old lines at Howell Mill and Marietta roads, warily approaching the earthen walls of Fort Wood, to be met near Curran street by Mayor James M. Calhoun, a party of citizens and a flag of truce, with the formal surrender of Atlanta. Colonel John Coburn, of Indianapolis, received the surrender, acting for General Ward, of the 20th Corps.

Onward went the advance horsemen of Colonel Capron's brigade, not certain if General Ferguson had really withdrawn his cavalry. General Ferguson hadn't and a spirited skirmish took place in Marietta street, not far from the Ponders place, despite the assurances of Mayor Calhoun that there would be no firing. But 'twas soon over, and Captain H. M. Scott, of Benjamin Harrison's old regiment, the 70th Indiana, now in command of 900 infantry from Coburn's and Wood's brigades of Ward's division, marched to the city hall.

Starved Hair Roots Cause Baldness-Falling Hair

Many cases of baldness and falling hair are caused by starved hair roots.

The hair, as you may know, is nourished by the blood.

Poor circulation in the scalp means that the hair roots are undernourished.

Then hair falls out and baldness results.

Fortunately this cause is simple to correct. Merely rub the bald spot and spots where the hair is falling out with Japanese Oil. A few drops worked in vigorously with the fingers for 2 minutes every night generally starts new hair within 3 to 4 weeks.

Japanese Oil is an antiseptic liniment that has been successful for 46 years in relieving aches and pains.

Many people told us that it helped them to grow new hair.

We investigated these statements. We asked doctors and they told us what we tell you.

If poor circulation is the cause of baldness and falling hair Japanese Oil promotes new growth by stimulating circulation. You can feel the blood coursing through your scalp. The slight throbbing tells you that Japanese Oil is doing its work.

Give Japanese Oil a fair trial. Results may come slowly at first but patience will be rewarded.

Your Druggist has Japanese Oil.

There's a Marked Contrast Between Ill-Fitting Brassieres and Custom-Tailored Youthforms

This photograph shows the harmful effects of the old style, flattening, tissue-destroying brassieres which destroy form and aid disease by breaking down the tissues, causing the busts to sag.

This photograph shows the same model with a Youthform on. Notice the busts are in position, all weight is removed from them and the tissues are allowed to grow back in their natural way, which rounds out the bust as well as being a great aid to health. Ask your doctor about the great benefits and relief given by regularly wearing Youthforms.

Women who have flattened their busts with ill-fitting, binding brassieres can now quickly correct this fault by regularly wearing YOUTHFORMS. This allows the tissues which have been torn from their natural place to grow back and bring with them that beautiful, well-rounded-out form so desired by all womanhood. YOUTHFORMS are made of Van Raalte's Swansea, or Glove Silk, and are priced at $3.00 each, 2 for $5.00, or 3 for $7.00.

AT THE CLOSE OF THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR, THE AMERICANS SOUGHT TO RECOVER THEIR FOREIGN TRADE WHICH HAD SUFFERED GREATLY DURING THE LONG STRUGGLE. ——•

THE BRITISH WEST INDIES HAD BEEN THE AMERICANS' RICHEST MARKET WHEN THEY WERE SUBJECTS OF THE KING.

THE WINNING OF INDEPENDENCE, WHICH MADE THEM FOREIGNERS TO THE ENGLISH, AND GREAT BRITAIN'S EXCLUSIVE TRADE POLICY CLOSED THIS MARKET TO THEM.

REACHING CANTON IN AUGUST, 1784, SHAW WAS RECEIVED HOSPITABLY BY THE CHINESE, AND FOUND A READY MARKET FOR HIS GOODS. EARLY IN 1785 HE SET OUT FOR HOME. ——•

turning to the porch. "Well, if your niece identifies this man we'll see the end of a nasty set of cowards. He's the brain, and the gang will fall to bits, once he's out of the way, like a slit string of beads."

"Good luck!" beamed Miss Luck, waving her hand.

"Back in half an hour," called Fay from the car.

As she looked back she saw the front door close on her aunt. She smiled, feeling confident that her plan must succeed. Inside was warmth, light and safety. The garden had harbored no reptile. And when Miss Luck knew how she had been tricked she must realize the absurdity of her fears.

For there was nothing to tell Fay that she had just locked up the poor lady in the company of a live snake.

Had Sergeant Davis beaten the garden three minutes previously he would have found the snake. It lurked, coiled up behind the pillars of the porch, a yard away from him, when he rang the bell. When Elsie opened the door to admit him she did not slam it to, but left it slightly ajar. This was the snake's chance. With the flash of the fer-de-lance it darted inside and hid behind the row of coats which hung in the recess under the stairs.

In appearance it was not an imposing snake, but among the most venomous of the species are the small reptiles which crawl in the dust. And it carried its sting—a razor in the breast pocket of its smart, plum-colored suit.

In its flat, black, oiled head, too, was its plan. Spotty—the Brain of the gang, who had croaked the woman in the woods, was now in quod, awaiting identification. The snake had been unable to strike before the advent of the police car. But, upon Fay's return, she would find a perfect gentleman waiting to open the door to her.

With the mentality of his kind he believed that the removal of the chief witness for the crown would cause the case against Spotty to collapse.

Happily unconscious of her anonymous visitor, Miss Luck strolled back to her parlor. She looked around her with pleasure at the warm comfort and rich coloring of the room. The suite had just been recovered with new tapestry—dahlias on a buff ground. None of your cretonne loose covers for Miss Luck.

As she lowered herself cautiously into a deep padded chair Elsie entered carrying a plate with molds of yellow-white sugar.

"I've brought you the sugar from the candy peel," she said loftily. "I've started to mix the Christmas puddings while I'm waiting for Miss Fay, and then when I come back I'll finish them before I go to bed."

Miss Luck beamed her approval.

"And please, mum," went on Elsie, "can I get you anything now? Because I won't want to answer the bell with my hands all mucky with flour."

"I shall require nothing, Elsie," Miss Luck informed her.

Three minutes later Elsie slipped through the hall, unbolted the front door cautiously, and started off at a good pace down the dim gray road towards the tram terminus.

Presently, Miss Luck finished her sugar and strolled out into the hall for a little exercise. At its far end was the kitchen door. It was outlined with a crack of yellow light, which, together with a smell of nutmeg, told her that Elsie was busy at her puddings.

The knowledge gave her such a sense of security that she determined not to disturb her conscientious maid in order to light the bedrooms. Miss Luck explained her illumination of the house by her wish to avoid a possible personal accident in the dark.

She was still so puffed with pride at the policeman's compliment that she did not feel her usual distaste of the hall, which was rather a dim cavern, with mahogany paneled walls. Even though her coat, hanging in the recess, bulged so that it looked exactly as though a man were hiding behind it, she did not quail.

She knew that Elsie was the other side of the kitchen door. So she made an impudent face at it, just to show it that she was not to be bluffed by a mere weatherproof. She even had a sudden childish impulse to punch it, and only refrained because the action involved a loss of dignity.

Up the stairs she ambled ponderously. When she was nearly at the top she slipped and had to hold the balustrate to prevent a fall, as the carpet became suddenly taut beneath her feet. Looking down, she saw that Elsie had failed to put back one of the brass rods, after cleaning.

"Elsie, Elsie," she called.

There was no reply, although the girl must have heard her. Miss Luck was on the point of descending the stairs when she opportunely remembered the Christmas puddings. Because of them, she resolved to accept the fiction of Elsie's deafness.

The staircase ended in a broad corridor. On one side were Elsie's bedroom, the bathroom, and the spare bedroom. On the other side Miss Luck's huge bedroom opened into Fay's smaller apartment.

As a rule Miss Luck hated to open her door in the dusk, because it faced the wardrobe mirror, and it gave her a shock to see a dim figure advance to meet her. But this evening she was forcibly struck by her vast, swaying gray shape.

"Fay's right," she said. "I am like an elephant. What an old fool I was to get so angry with her!"

Her face grew wistful as she remembered how Fay had hinted that she, too, could acquire courage if she would only realize her reserves. From the bottom of her heart she wished that, by some miracle, her cowardly nature might be changed. She had been told that miracles actually did happen. Her silly muddle of features did not look quite so silly as she uttered up a voiceless prayer for a miracle to happen to her. A prayer—to be brave.

Feeling quite gay and confident, she strolled over to her toilet table. To her surprise a cheap blue leather bag lay on her silver tray. She opened it and found, by the evidence of money, key, packet of fags and sundry cheap aids to beauty, that it belonged to Elsie.

Miss Luck forgot her exaltation in the human indignation of a mistress. This time the careless baggage should stir her lazy bones and come upstairs, in spite of floury hands.

On her way to the bell, however, the thought of the Christmas puddings prevailed. Elsie might get mixed in her quantities, were she called away. Leaving the bag on her toilet table, Miss Luck descended the staircase, treading carefully over the loose carpet on the twelfth step. She was crossing the hall when she glanced at the front door.

It gave her a mild shock of discomfort to discover that the bolt was not drawn. She distinctly remembered doing so herself when she had seen Fay to the police car. Feeling vaguely disturbed she burst into the kitchen to catch Elsie unawares. The homely place reassured her with its glowing fire and snowy table laden with suet and dried fruits. The primrose enameled walls gleamed in the gas light and the air was hot and spiced.

But Elsie was not there. Miss Luck's heart began to hammer as she went into larder, scullery and outhouses, calling the girl by name. When she returned to the kitchen her eye fell upon the empty peg upon which Elsie's coat usually hung. Suddenly she felt blasted by a terrible sense of desolation. Elsie had gone out scretly and left her all alone.

Miss Luck's muddle of features puckered up like a pimpernel on a wet day. To understand her feelings it must be stated that the situation was unique. When she was quite young the doctor had prescribed constant companionship, after a nervous breakdown. Being a lady of means, Miss Luck had converted a temporary measure into a permanent one.

She felt helpless as a stranded baby. Fortunately, however, her first flush of indignation left her no room for actual fear. She vowed that Elsie should have her marching orders. When she returned from the pictures Miss Luck would be waiting for her, on the mat, Elsie should learn who was her master.

The kitchen clock, too, provided her with a measure of comfort, for its hands stood at 5:15. Already half the time had slipped away and she had survived. Mechanically she scooped up a handful of raisins and put them in her coat pocket. In another quarter of an hour Fay would be back. Meanwhile, she thought she would feel safer in her own bedroom than on the ground floor.

It really seemed as though Fay's strategy were going to succeed, for Miss Luck was careful to curb her unhealthy imagination as she went upstairs. It is true she did not like going through the gloom of the hall and took pains not to look in the direction of the line of coats. On her way she rehearsed the notice that she knew would never be given, for Elsie would not allow it.

"I will not tolerate disobedience."

"No one defies me twice."

"What hurts me most is the deceit."

These fine phrases carried her safely up the corridor, which—in contrast with the hall—glowed with light. It had a red turkey carpet, two marbles busts upon pedestals, one palm, and a picture after Lendseer.

With the exception of the bathroom and her own bedroom all the white enameled doors had their keys on the outside, in proof that they were never used. As Fay's sanctum communicated with her own by a door without even a flimsy bolt, Miss Luck locked it, and then put the key in her coat pocket. She marched, like a soldier, into her own fortress, where she set about the task of making it impregnable.

It was now more necessary than ever to curb her imagination, for the pictures had made her dread gigantic hands with clawing fingers shooting out from behind curtains and secret panels opening behind her in the fall. She began to give Elsie notice all over again, but this time her phrases were pitched in an ominous minor key.

"O, Elsie, how could you betray me?"

"Haven't I always been a kind and generous misfress to you?"

"Perhaps you'll be sorry when you hear I'm—"

Miss Luck checked herself just in time. Under the beds. Behind the window hangings. Inside the wardrobes. The worst she found was a little fluff. Dusting her skirt, she went to the window and looked out.

She was amazed to find that it was still twilight. The laurels and hollies stood out distinctly against a neutral background and the lamps in the road were not yet lit. Officially, it was afternoon. As she leaned out of the frame in the hope of hearing the car her broad back was towards the door. So she did not see the handle turn slowly, as though some one on the other side were trying to enter.

But she looked around at the sound of footsteps. Or, rather, they sounded like footsteps, creeping along the corridor. She put her hand automatically to her heart and then withdrew it proudly, as she remembered the locked doors. Besides, she knew how much mimicry there was about the noises of an empty house at dusk. That creak, for instance, exactly resembled the opening of Elsie's door.

She looked at her watch and heaved a sigh. It was nearly 25 minutes past 5. Of course, she could not count upon Fay returning to the dot—but her vigil would soon be over. A car purred down the road, and although it did not stop it seemed a link with the outside world.

She determined not to let her thoughts get out of hand. Little bits of cotton wool in her ears would be helpful. Nourishment, too, seemed a good plan. As she began to crunch her raisins she wondered why people hinted that she was greedy. Once she had taxed Fay with the question and had been comforted by her tactful reply.

"Not greedy, darling. But, perhaps you give the impression of some one who's been kept short."

That was it. Miss Luck nodded vehemently at her reflection. She had been half starved at her expensive boarding school.

Meanwhile it was tonic to look about her room, which was furnished in florid taste, with an imitation empire bed, a rose pink carpet and pink wall paper, picked into panels with silver beading. No one should feel nervous in such surroundings. Those curious scraping noises were plainly made by a mouse. Any minute now Fay would return. And here she was in a cheerful brightly lit room, from whence she would step into a cheerful brightly lit corridor, down into a cheerful, brightly lit ground floor.

Luckily, she did not know of the startling change which had taken place just outside her closed door. The white doors and red carpet were blotted out by a pall of darkness, transforming the homely passage into a jungle, wherein crept and rustled some creature of the night. Miss Luck began to yawn. She played with the idea of going downstairs to ring up the police station and ascertain the exact time at which the car had started. Only—that might look like nerves. It was rather too late in the day to wear the white feather, now that the hands of her watch were past the half hour. Besides, she did not quite like the idea of passing that line of coats in the hall.

Suddenly her expression grew intent. In the distance there was a pinging note, like the buzz of an insect. It might be the car returning with Fay. In order to listen better she removed the plugs of wool from her ears.

Her face paled. Some one was moving inside Fay's room.

This time it was not fancy. There were unmistakable footsteps on the other side of the thin wall. Intelligent footsteps, too, that paused when she moved, in order to mark her down.

In an agony of fear, Miss Luck told herself that it was impossible. She had, herself, locked Fay's door, and the key was in her pocket. Besides, there were old-fashioned lusters on the mantelpiece which always rattled when any one walked over a loose board in the middle of the room. As the thought flashed through her mind it came—the thin, icy tinkling of cut glass.

Miss Luck's terror was too acute to endure. She was timid of most tangible things, but her practical mind rejected sheer impossibilities. She did not believe in ghosts. And no human being could pass through a locked door.

It was Elsie's bag, lying on her table, that suggested the solution. The girl must have discovered her loss, directly she reached the tram. What was more natural than for her to return and stealthily creep about the house to find her bag?

Miss Luck knew that she was on the right trail, for Elsie had informed her of her discovery that the bathroom key fitted the lock of Fay's room. She determined to give her deceitful domestic the fright of her life.

"Come out," she called, in a loud voice. "I know you are there."

There was silence, as the footsteps stopped dead. Miss Luck advanced towards the door of communication.

"Come out and show yourself," she repeated. "I'm waiting for you."

But as she stood, in expectant majesty, her attention was distracted by the hooting of a motor horn outside the gate. She hurried to the window to see a car stationary in the road. This time there was no mistake for Fay's voice floated faintly on the air.

The person in the adjoining room had caught the sounds even sooner than herself. Returning from the window, Miss Luck looked inside, to find the bird flown.

She smiled grimly. Elsie could wait her pleasure, with Fay at the gate. Humming tunelessly, she opened her door, only to step back in surprise at the belt of darkness which lay beyond the area illuminated by her room.

She nodded sagely. Another of my lady's tricks. This fresh demonstration of guile was typical of Elsie's mentality. Since her mistress could not actually see as she stole upstairs, she would swear by all her gods that, all the time, she was in the kitchen.

As the electric switches were in the hall, Miss Luck groped her way along the wall until her outstretched hand touched the balustrate. Stepping cautiously into the gulf, she started to descend, peering the while into the well of darkness. Suddenly she stopped and stared more closely, blinking her eyes the while, as though to clear some flaw of vision. Against the dark panel of the front door was a denser shadow, like the blurred shape of a man.

The light from the porch filtering through the fanlight fell upon a flat, shiny black head, a peaked evil face, rotten teeth. A corrupt soul peered out of small, flickering eyes.

"Like something from a sewer," flashed across Miss Luck's mind.

As she stood, petrified with shock, her brain worked rapidly. She realized that Elsie had not come back after all. Below her crouched the actual source of the mysterious happenings—the footsteps, the scratching. Probably, following some predatory urge, he had crept about the house under cover of darkness. His cunning would soon detect which key fitted the lock of Fay's door.

Her hands grew sticky and her throat dry as she thought of the boltless door of communication. Only a few frail panels of wood had divided her from him. She remembered the murder in the wood, and those newspaper details from which Fay had been spared. Had she confronted the which the law is dispensed. Have patience, madam. Believe me, I would do a deal, a very great deal, to serve you. But be merciful by not asking me to do that which is beyond my power. But I'll do what I can. Be sure of that." He was considering her ever, and his eyes had lately narrowed a little. "Come to me again tomorrow, madam. By then I may be able to be more definite. Seek me before I dine."

In dejection she thanked him and withdrew. When she had gone, he sank into his chair again, and filled himself a cup from the jug. In silence he sat considering the wine before he drank it. In silence he continued after he had drunk.

The Fool, watching him covertly, at last broke in upon his brooding.

"Why so thoughtful? What's to think about? Isn't all plain?"

"Plain?" Rhynsault stared at him across the table with the dull eyes of a suddenly awakened man. "What is all plain?"

"A number of things, concerning both Master Danvelt and Master Danvelt's widow in prospect." Abruptly he changed the subject. "Have you ever observed that there is no loveliness to compare with loveliness in distress? I marvel that you escaped the appeal of it; that you could still be harsh with her. But I admire it in you. I admire it and commend it. Duty first; that is the motto of the Lord Claude de Rhynsault. The other things may follow."

"What other things?"

"The fruits of duty."

Rhynsault looked at him again. "What then?" he said.

"Why, what is temptation for? Certainly not a thing to be resisted. For what, after all, is temptation? The hawker of life's most alluring wares And where are the advantages of being ducal governor, Burgundian lieutenant in Zealand, lord of life and death, dispenser of the high justice and the low, if you may not help yourself to a burgher's wife now and again?"

"Pish!" said the governor, and sat on bemused.

The Fool rose and went to fetch his arch-lote from the table on which it had been placed.

"Here's advice for your case from the new song I've made." He thrummed a moment, and then delivered himself in a voice harsh as a raven's:

"Take all things that life can give;
Love and wine and laughter,
Live your fill while you may live,
Scorn the life contemplative
Of things that may come after,
He, ha, ha, ha! Hereafter;"

More would have followed but that Rhynsault silenced him. "Cease your hellcat music!"

The Fool went out, his face distorted by his silent laughter. That there was devilry ahead he knew as surely as he knew Claude de Rhynsault, which was much better than Claude de Rhynsault knew himself. He had done his best to apply a spur to that devilry, out of the sheer malice of his nature.

The hall of the Gravenhof was unusually thronged on the following morning by suitors awaiting audience of the governor. Among these, but apart from them, and waiting patiently, sat Mistress Johanna, attended by her servants, Jan and Peter, and her waiting woman, Grieta. Her outward composure betrayed little of the anxiety and distress within.

Above the subdued hum of conversation, a voice broke suddenly, cawing an evil song. The impish Fool surged into the hall and sang his way through the crowd of suitors, who fell away before him.

He reached the governor's closet and passed in. The governor sat considering a list which had been placed before him by the usher. He looked up at the unceremonious entrance of the Fool.

"You are inopportune," he greeted him.

"So I perceived as I crossed the antechamber." He leaned upon the table, and ran a finger down the usher's list until he came to the name of Johanna Danvelt. There the finger paused. "I should begin there, since this is the only case that offers complexities and may delay you. The others are easily disposed of."

The governor and the Fool looked into each other's eyes. Rhynsault yielded to the suggestion, and the usher was instructed.

Johanna came, the usher withdrew, the Fool retired into the background to lounge unnoticed on the window seat, set in a deep embrasure. She began by thanking his excellency for admitting her so promptly. He was graciousness itself. He assured her that to keep her waiting was a discourtesy of which he could never be guilty.

She had brought him, she announced, yet some further letters, letters written to herself by Philip on the eve on their marriage, so that he might compare the hands.

"So much was hardly necessary. The letters you left with me last night suffice abundantly."

"You have made the comparison already?" she cried eagerly.

"Nay, nay. That will follow in the proper season."

"In the proper season?" The implied postponement dismayed her again.

And then came aid from an unexpected quarter. Said the Fool from the background, almost peremptorily: "What season more proper than the present?"

"Eh?" Frowning, the governor turned to stare at him.

"Thank you, sir. Thank you!" cried Johanna.

"Nay, mistress; no thanks. I but preach my philosophy of life; which is to seize ever what the season sends."

If the answer mystified her, it was clear to Rhynsault. He spoke again of his eagerness, his ardent desire to serve her in all things.

"Your husband claims Count Anthony of Guelders for his friend, and desires me to send a letter to him," he said.

He watched her intently as he spoke. Momentarily Johanna's eyes dilated. A sudden dread, a horror swept through her. The thought of appealing to Count Anthony had already presented itself to her, had been weighed and finally dismissed because of a terrible fear lest, yielding to an overwhelming temptation to remove the obstacle that stood between them, the count's intervention now might have the result of precipitating her husband's doom. Her confidence in the count's honor might not really permit her to believe this thing. Yet not even in the last extremity would she dare to put it to the test; and the suggestion now that Philip himself should be the agent of such a thing appalled her.

Yet her bearing revealed nothing of this. She looked steadily at Rhynsault, and shook her head.

"My husband overstates the case when he claims Count Anthony as his friend. Once Count Anthony befriended him, just out of chivalry. He had no previous knowledge of him, and has had little since; certainly no knowledge that would enable him to speak to my husband's character and pursuits; nor, can I suppose, sufficient interest to bring him to intervene."

Rhynsault appeared relieved. "It is as well," he said. "For Count Anthony is with the army investing Liege, and there would be delays in reaching him."

"All to no purpose even then," she repeated. "And fortunately not necessary, since you have these letters. If you will compare the signatures . . ."

He unfolded one of the letters, and glanced at it. "What's this? 'My jewel,'" he read.

The Fool laughed. Rhynsault swung upon him. "Begone!" he roared. "Out of this! I'll have no ribaldries of yours."

"Provide your own, then," said the Fool, as he made for the door of an inner room.

The smile with which the governor turned to Johanna was invested with a fresh meaning for her, now that her senses had been awakened by the Fool.

"'My jewel,'" he read again. "A jewel. indeed," he agreed. "On my soul too fair a jewel for any loutish burgher."

She repressed all show of the indignation that consumed her, save the scarlet flame that swept across her face.

"It . . . it is the signature, my lord, that I desire you to consider."

"Oh, yes, the signature. But there's more than a signature to be considered, mistress."

He sank his voice to a gentle, wooing note. He set a hand on the back of her chair, and leaned over her as he spoke. Only the knowledge of his power and that her husband's life lay in his hands, and might be blotted out at his pleasure if he were provoked, prevented her from using the weapons of righteous anger to break this evil spell he wove about her.

Abruptly he pushed the letters back into her hand. "Here, take you these."

"But . . . but you have not compared the writing."

"Pish! What shall the writing signify to me?" Never a patient wooer, he drove now straight to his ends. "Your husband's life doesn't hang on a row of pothooks. It hangs on my belief in what you tell me."

"But there is more than that. There are many who can testify . . ."

"Perdition take them all! I care nothing for their testimony. Your word is enough and I'll accept your word that the treasonable letter is not in your husband's hand."

"You'll accept my word?"

"Even though I did not believe it."

Followed a pause in which she could hear the thudding of her heart. "If I did that," he resumed, "your husband would be delivered from his peril. And it is a very mortal peril, I can assure you."

"But how can that be, since he is innocent?"

Rhynsault straightened himself again, and again laughed.

"Innocent he may be. But I must be persuaded to pronounce him so."

"What else can you pronounce him when the evidence is . . ."

"A fig for evidence!" he interrupted her. "Here! Take your letters, I say." And again he proffered them.

Mechanically she put forth her hand to receive them. The next moment it was in his grip.

"What a little hand!" he murmured. "So white and slim and frail, yet strong enough to hold the destiny of a man. Look you, mistress, I place the life of Philip Danvelt in this white palm, to do with absolutely as you will. Surely, you would never have the heart to destroy it?"

In a silence of horror she continued to stare at him until, swept by a gust of passion, he pulled her roughly from her chair into his arms at a single wrench. Now at last active resistance awakened in her. She battled against the enfolding grip of those sinewy arms.

"Let me go! Let me go at once!"

"What? And leave your husband in the hangman's hands? Be kind, mistress, as you look for kindness in me. One little word from you, and Philip Danvelt may have his life and go. One little word."

With an inarticulate ejaculation, she writhed out of his grip; enough to liberate her right arm and hand. In a flash that hand had closed upon the hilt of the dagger hanging from his belt. Before he could even guess her intent, the blade was out, the point descending towards his throat. Within an inch of it, he caught her wrist and the dagger fell to the floor.

"An ugly claw, mistress, for so fair a hand," he mocked her. Then he grew stern. "Come, now! I've been gentle and played the gallant long enough. Will you pay for this attempt upon my life, or shall your husband? It is for you to choose."

"You fill me with horror! You unclean beast!"

The phrase brought him up as if it had been a blow.

"And is it so? Horrifying am I? Well, well! We must amend such unnatural feelings."

Shuddering at the sight of him, she turned abruptly to depart.

But he reached the door ahead of her.

"Look you, mistress. I am not of those who take, as I might, what is not freely given. That is not my way."

"Will you let me go?" she demanded firmly, only anger and contempt in her eyes.

"Ay, mistress, since you insist. But you shall come again, and soon, or I'll stretch the neck of your loutish husband without mercy or scruple." He held her glance a moment, then turned, flung wide the door, and stood aside to let her pass.

She went out, her head high.

The governor of Middelburg dispensed that day an expeditious justice. Long before nightfall the four burghers impeached of seditious activities had been sentenced by him to be nanged. And he let it be known that Philip Danvelt, whose trial was postponed for a further investigation of the evidence, would, no doubt, be sentenced in time to mount the gallows also.

But Danvelt's case was exercising him. He had been confident that some evidence incriminating Danvelt would be found. But all his efforts had drawn so blank that he seriously began to ask himself if it might not be that Philip Danvelt was innocent, and that the incriminating letter which he held was from some other Danvelt than this. He came to think that, if this were not indeed the case, Johanna would never have brought him letters so that he might compare the hands. He might have resolved the doubt by making the comparison as she had begged him. He refrained precisely because he feared that the comparison would establish Danvelt's innocence. And he wanted no proofs of that at present.

To his aid in his quandary came that emissary of Satan, the Fool, entering the great hall abruptly. Rhynsault took counsel with him. The Fool smiled inscrutably.

"Faith, the course of true lover never did run smooth."

"Love!" bellowed the governor. "What has love to do with it?"

"If love had naught to do with it, there would be no difficulty. It's like a cough. It can't be hid. The other difficulty is that you are a man of your word. Having informed Mistress Danvelt that failing certain amiabilities her husband will hang . . ."

"What's that? Was your ear to the keyhole?"

"My wits are my ears, and they are ever at the keyhole of the world. It is thus that I am informed that you are perplexed because, if Danvelt were hanged and afterwards proved innocent, the thing would have its awkwardness. The duke is at times unreasonable. He takes narrow views of such adventures as the one that is now alluring you."

The governor raised his hand and drove a blow at the Fool. Kuoni ducked to avoid it.

"Hold your hand!" he cried. "Your course is simple. All you need to do is to establish Danvelt's guilt"

"But that's the difficulty."

The Fool shook his head slowly. "You've rack and thumb-screws and all the other implements for the extraction of truth. Extract it from Danvelt himself."

Rhynsault banged the table with his fist. "I should have thought of it!" he exclaimed. He summoned Diesenhofer, issued his commands, and went presently below to see them executed. The Fool went with him, to gratify the feeral thirst that was a part of his warped nature. Into that vaulted underground chamber with its instruments of torture they brought Danvelt to be racked, ostensibly because he was conceived guilty of sedition, in reality because he was the husband of a beautiful and chaste woman.

Not only did he persist in denial, but he protested against the measures being taken with him, urging that there was no evidence to justify it, and that such evidence as was urged could easily be proved no evidence at all. He was a man of strong thews and great physical vigor, and he had the hardy courage usually accompanying these physical endowments. He persisted with denial until he lost consciousness.

They rested him for 48 hours, and then stretched him on the rack. His body, maimed already, turned traitor to his will. To win respite, he returned at last the required affirmative to that reiterated question: "Do you confess to having written a letter to the convicted traitor, Thomas Tegel, in which you offered to supply arms and money for the projected rising against the government of the duke's highness?"

The secretary took down his answer. He was removed from the rack, and carried back to his prison. On the morrow they brought him the confession in a written form that he might ratify it, as was by law required. He refused to do so, and was racked again. This time, he yielded, and when the confession was again put before him, signed it, and so signed away his life.

And in those four days, Mistress Johanna, to the governor's deep surprise and disappointment, had made no sign. Three days longer, Rhynsault waited, then on the seventh Danvelt was put upon his public trial, confronted with his confession, which made the calling and examination of witnesses supererogatory, and sentenced to death, the sentence to be carried out upon the following morning.

Rhynsault postponed the signing of the warrant until the evening, and when he signed it he did so almost as an act of anger. He had waited confidently, from the moment that the news of sentence had gone abroad, for the return of Mistress Johanna. Indeed, it was to bring her that he had proceeded to trial and sentence of her husband. He had confidently hoped, in his limited knowledge and lack of discernment, that she would seek him in such a spirit that his signature to the warrant of execution might never be required. Because her continued absence brought him a sense of defeat, he signed at last in fury, adding a note that the sentence be carried out at daybreak. Upon that he went to supper without appetite. It was then that a servant entered to say that Mistress Johanna Danvelt was below, and begged the governor to grant her audience.

"Mistress Johanna!" The governor heaved himself up. His face lighted with an evil satisfaction. He looked across at the Fool and laughed. "Bring her up."

The Fool withdrew. Rhynsault poured himself more wine, and laughed again.

The Fool made his way to the hall where Johanna waited with her servants, Jan and Peter. She stiffened as she might have done at the approach of a snake.

"Come, mistress," he urged. "Take heart. Here you have nothing to fear." He approached her by another step. "You are come, as I conceive, in the hope of averting the doom pronounced upon your husband." He paused a moment, to add rapidly: "Why should you merely hope for that which it is within your power to govern?"

That stirred her to speech at last. "Do you mock me?" she asked him witheringly.

"Mock!" He raised hands and eyes. "Heaven be my witness, I would be your friend and help you in your need." Is there no one to whom you can turn for aid?"

"I know of none," she said.

"Think now! Think!" he urged her,

Chef of the Seven Seas

Etienne, a Creole Chef, Who Has Roamed the Waterways of the Earth, Making Jumbos and Grayfish Bisques, Jambalayas and Other Dishes Native to His Own New Orleans, Discourses on the Joys and Genius of the Famous Creole Cuisine.

BY HELEN BUCKLER.

The Old Absinthe House in New Orleans

From an etching by E. H. Suydam

WHILE I, self-confessed gourmet that I am, should have thoroughly enjoyed in any case that marvelous manifestation of a superior civilization known as creole cooking, the pleasure would not have been quite so surcharged with romance had I not been bowed to the portal, as it were, by old black Etienne.

By what slim threads of chance sometimes hang our happiest adventures! If I had properly attended to my correspondence and had not found it necessary to send a radiogram that first night out . . . Or if the radio operator had not been himself somewhat of a gourmet, and, as goes with the temperament, affable and loquacious. . . . Or if the decks had not been pitching so damply underfoot that it was pleasanter that night to chat in a snug cabin than to walk. . . .

Ah, so I was going to New Orleans, going to New Orleans to eat. . . . The radio operator could understand that. Was not his own name decidedly Gallic and he himself fond of good pastry? Would he not remain on this ship forever if they kept Etienne in the pastry galley? Never had he eaten so well on board any vessel. Now there was the person for me to talk with if I were interested in creole cookery. Etienne . . . Etienne Gaspard, who would be proud to tell me that he was a real creole black whose forebears came to New Orleans from Santo Domingo and Martinique, that he was a full-fledged cook before he was half grown to his present imposing height, and that in a long life time he has cooked his way into and out of practically every port of the Seven Seas. Name any creole dish whatever. Etienne would know about it.

I lost not a moment. I caught my cook at bay in his tiny galley. There, like the artist who muses on in the dim studio when there is no longer light to see the colors upon his palette, Etienne was lingering in his compact cubicle planning new creations, crisper and tastier, for the morrow.

Like any other artist, the old black man with the deeply lined face and the graying wool showing below his high starched white hat warmed to a sympathetic discussion of his work.

"'Co'se," he remarked. "Ize plenty old. Fifty-seven. Yes'm, fifty-seven. You wouldn't guess it, I reckon, but Ize been cookin' fo'ty-one yeahs, yes'm, fo'ty-one. Ize 'leven when I sta'ted to work at cookin.' Got fifty cents a week. Fus', I learned woman's cookin', wo'kin' in a boa'din' house in N'Awlins. Then I learned man's cookin', in the he-tels. I been chef-cook in my time."

After that first evening I found my way down to the little bakery many times. Let the others watch for the porpoises. Perched on a stool just outside the galley door (for there was room for but a single occupant at a time in the miniature workroom) watching the southern seas slide past the one heavily screened porthole, limning it in gemlike blue flame, I spent the remainder of the voyage listening to Etienne's tales and watching his deft demonstrations, not to say sampling them.

"Set right easy now an' I'll show you how. I kin wo'k fas', but I'll go slow so's you kin ketch on."

I watch Etienne make pastry dough, "very pa'ticulah dough to make," and the basis for many a crisp vol-au-vent, fruit tart and what not. He is apologetic for his limited facilities. He takes equal parts of flour and fat, scorning to use either scale or measure. Indeed, his equipment is as meager as his working space is circumscribed. But when was your inspired creator ever stopped for lack of tools?

"Two pounds of flouah? I kin guess two pounds, three pounds, four pounds . . . I might miss it two ounces."

As we talk, the pastry dough progresses. The egg yolks properly kneaded into the flour, the long patient process of pounding in the fat is begun. When the dough has been pounded paper thin, the excess flour is neatly brushed off, the dough folded several times and the long process of pounding begun again. Perhaps due to the excitement of telling me of days in the Spanish-American war when he played trombone in the regimental band, Etienne forgets to put in all the fat he has set out for the purpose. But he is not one to be daunted by whatsoever circumstance.

"When yo' knows how, yo' kin correct youah mistake," he points out. "I'm glad that happened, Mam'zelle. Now yo' kin see bettah how it's prope'ly done."

You can build a perfectly good working philosophy watching and listening to Etienne. Where facts are unalterable, he acquiesces, and gracefully. When there is no butter, use lard. If there are no pecans, nor yet any cocoanut, to make pralines, finely chopped citron can be made to do, if you only believe so firmly enough. (I admit I had not the necessary faith.)

While our ship pushes steadily through azure days and a sea grown incredibly smooth, toward the city acclaimed of gourmets, I sit at the feet of wisdom and anticipate those famous creole dishes I am soon to enjoy. Just to hear Etienne tell about them is to drool at the mouth. And he realizes to the full the drama of the moment.

"Yo' all want me to tell yo' about gumbo? Well, then" . . .

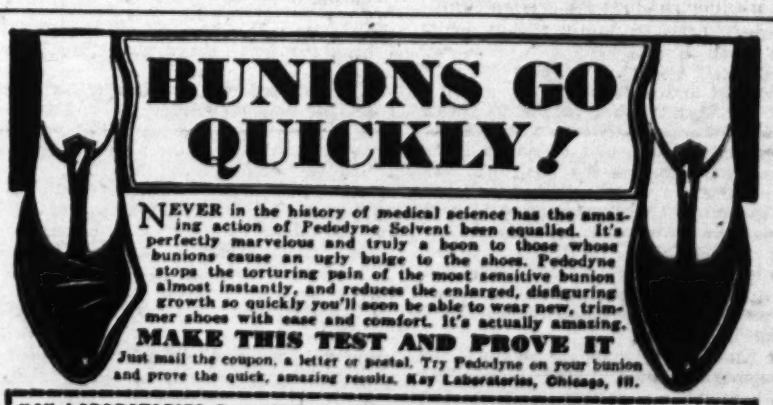

Eyes shining, his dark wrinkled face aglow, he draws himself to his full great height, his starched headdress all but scraping the ceiling of the galley, his long-fingered, restless black hands weaving a continuous accompaniment to his eager dissertation. Drawing a deep breath, he begins:

"To make gumbo yo' take an' put some buttah in the pot. Then yo' go to wo'k an' take some good sweet ham an' cut it in dice, yo' know, like croutons, an' then yo' take some onions an' chop 'em up fine. Take some flouah an' make brown roux (browned fat and flour before addition of stock) an' put youah ham an' youah onions in the pot an' brown it up. Afteh yo' brown it up, yo' take some stock an' put in half a gallon an' let it boil. Then put in some thyme. Add some chicken an' oystehs. If you cain't git no chicken (there is history in that phrase!) take some nice fresh shrimps an' boil 'em an' put 'em in youah gumbo. Then when yo' take it up, add file powdeh (powdered dried sassafras leaves), a tablespoon an' a half fo' a family pot."

If Etienne lacks the preciseness of the modern recipe book, he also lack its dullness. Instead, he gives you his own enthusiasm for a dish's grandeur, entices you with its infinite possibilities of variation, and invites you yourself to unthought-of creativeness. The mere mention of creole cookery had always opened to my mind a vision of gorgeous gastronomy. Etienne did not fail me. Later, during my stay in New Orleans, I gathered creole recipes from many sources—from dusty old cookery books found in the second-hand shops of Royal street, from novels and essays written in that early gay period when Louisiana was still part of the French empire, from acquaintances and from famous restaurateurs. But it was Etienne who gave me my introduction to the famed cuisine and gave it with such fervor and such flavor of anticipation that when I think of creole cookery I think first of that romantic wanderer.

Like gumbo, jambalaya may find its basis in any one of a variety of flesh, fowl or fish. However, where gumbo is of stew-like consistency, jambalaya is a dry dish. Here is a delicious old time recipe for jambalaya of chicken:

Cut in pieces a young chicken and slices of raw ham; fry the whole in hot lard and set aside. In the same lard fry an onion and a tomato; when nearly done add a cup of washed, uncooked rice, the chicken and ham. If the rice is soaked beforehand it will hasten the next process. Let all fry together, stirring constantly. Add enough water to just cover the whole and let boil slowly until done. Season with strong pepper, bay leaves, chopped parsley and thyme. Cook down dry and serve hot.

watching her keenly. "What of one, handsome and radiant as a prince of faerie, a noble and puissant gentleman, a mirror of chivalry, self-appointed protector of the oppressed? One who once served your husband in his extremity?"

"Count Anthony!" she murmured.

The Fool chuckled. "Behold how quickly he leaps to your mind, mistress!"

She stared at him, a deathly pallor in her face, yet something of indignation in her eyes. He laughed outright.

"Not so austere, this Count Anthony of Guelders, as repute pretends! Not above treading a garden path on a summer's night with the lovely lady of a Flemish burgher. My Lord Rhynsault had best go warily with his exalted Chastity for a rival."

She sat appalled. So that indiscretion of hers was not buried as she supposed in her own heart. This evil creature had seen enough to infer more. And as with him, so, no doubt, with others. How much had they seen, indeed, and how much in their vileness did they surmise? Indignation surged up in her, but it was indignation on the count's behalf.

"You dare to insult one who is as noble as you are abominable and evil!"

"But what self-betraying heat on the pretty gentleman's behalf!" he mocked her. "O Piety, thy name is slyness!"

The door opened, and Rhynsault came slowly into view from the shadows about the doorway of his closet.

"I trust, mistress, that this malapert Fool of mine has not been giving you annoyance."

"Oh, that . . . that is no matter, sir." She was suddenly breathless.

"You are too clement. Whatever befall your husband, there is no charge against you, and I will have none offend you." He let the Fool go, nevertheless. "I had hoped, mistress, that you would have come before. Before we were constrained by duty to come to extremes where your husband is concerned. Still, better late than never, as the proverb runs." He raised his voice to call. "Who waits?"

An officer clanked in by the great doors which stood open at the hall's end.

"To command, excellency."

The governor waved a hand towards Johanna's servants. "Conduct these knaves below, and let them wait there."

Johanna interposed. "By your excellency's leave, I should prefer them to remain."

He seemed surprised. "Mistress, it is not my way to open my mind before grooms. They go hence alone, or they go hence with you, at your pleasure; but they go hence at once."

There was a pause in which she fought down her loathing and her dread, a battle of which the only sign was the twisting and untwisting of her hands. At last she yielded.

"Very well," she said, as calmly as she might. "Go wait below for me, Jan."

But Jan, that old and faithful servant, pervaded on her behalf with that loathing and that dread to an extent scarcely less than her own, ventured to advise her. To him Philip's life was as nothing compared with the least hurt to her.

"Come away, mistress," he muttered urgently. "Come away home with us."

She was cold and stern with him. "Go, Jan!" she said shortly.

The servant made a mute gesture of despair, half raising his hands, and then letting them fall heavily to his sides. He shrugged despondently and with Peter stalked down the long hall under the officer's escort.

Within his snug closet, whither he conducted her, the governor considerately desired Mistress Danvelt to sit, and would have relieved her of her cloak, but that she clung to the garment, urging that her business was brief. Abruptly she came to it. They had brought her word of the sentence passed that day upon her husband.

"Your distress moves me profoundly," he said slowly. "I did not think that it could mean so much to you."

"You did not think . . .?" She was between surprise and indignation.

"What cause did you give me to think it? I placed Danvelt's life in your hands. Did I not offer to set him free at a little word from you? Before the trial, it would have been so easy. Now!" He hunched his shoulders, paused, and then resumed: "And since you haven't chosen to speak, what was I to suppose? Why, that, like so many wives, you would count yourself well rid of an importunate husband."

She looked up into that handsomely florid countenance.

"This is noble," she said. "It is generous to mock an unfortunate woman in the hour of her affliction."

"I do not mock," he assured her in words which his very glance belied. "If it is not as I have supposed, why did you not come before?"

"Because, knowing him innocent, I did not believe it possible you could find him guilty. I waited confidently for his trial; for I believed that in the duke's judgment seat you dealt in justice; that you would not dare to deal in anything else."

"You were right. I have dealt in nothing else."

"Close upon 20 witnesses waited to testify. They were brought here in answer to my appeal and you were informed of it. They could have proved beyond question that my husband did not write the letter upon which you arraigned him. Yet those witnesses were denied a hearing."

"To have heard them would but have wasted time. The evidence of your husband's guilt was complete! He confessed his treason; and he set his signature to the confession, which was written down in a measure as he uttered it."

This was a blow between the eyes to her. Her anger was shouldered out by dismay and growing terror.

"Confessed?" she echoed. "He confessed, you say? What did he confess?"

"That he had written the letter upon which I impeached him; that he had supplied arms and money to equip the rebels."

"But that is not true!" she wailed. "It's not true! How, then, could he confess it?"

"He should know the truth of it better than you, mistress." Rhynsault now affected a tone of regret. "All that you can say is that he never took you into his confidence in the matter. It is not likely that he would have done so. Shrewd men do not tell secrets to their women-folk, especially secrets that will put a rope about their necks."

"But I was not alone in my belief, in my knowledge," she answered, battling desperately against the odds that were suddenly heaped against her. "The letter was not in his hand. Twenty of the witnesses could have sworn to that. If he confessed . . ." She broke off. Suddenly she saw the explanation, and cried out in horror: "You tortured him!"

Still half-sitting on the table's edge, he watched her with those smouldering eyes, the ghost of a smile about his lips. Then he reached forth, and set a hand upon her shoulder. He spoke very softly, in a tone of gentle remonstrance.

"It was in your power to save him," he reminded her; and added, after a moment's pause: "For that matter, it still is. The hand that signed the death warrant can sign the reprieve. If you have come to speak the little word I begged of you, you have not come in vain."

"Is there no pity in you?" she cried. "Is there no fear either of man or God in your dark soul? What do you look to gain by sending my husband to his death? Nothing, nothing, nothing! What shall it profit you to leave me widowed? What satisfaction shall you have from that? Is that man's worthy vengeance upon a woman whose only offence against him is her virtue? You do not fear the justice of your duke, you say. My husband's confession is your buckler. But have you no fear of the justice of God? What shield will avail you against that when your hour comes? Will you imperil your immortal soul for this empty satisfaction you are contemplating?"

Rhynsault moved from the edge of the table, swung round to confront her, squarely planted upon his feet.

"Look you, madam, I have listened long enough. If you are come to deafen me with words, to weary me with a sermon upon heaven and hell, you distress yourself in vain. Heaven and hell have nothing to do with us at present. We are upon earth, we two, and alive. Talk to me of this, and I will listen. For the rest, I do not want your husband's life. It is the law that claims it."

"You are the law in Middelburg."

"Its minister only. If I were to check it now, and set your husband free, I should be false to my duty as the duke's lieutenant here. Yet, for your sake, I would do even that." He paused a moment to add: "But I have my price. And you know it, mistress."

With lowered eyes and in a half-strangled voice she answered him. "Yes, I know it. And I know that if I paid that price, my husband would curse and abominate the life I had so purchased for him."

"Are you so sure?" said Rhynsault softly, and with that provoked a revival of her earlier indignation.

She looked up at him in scornful wonder. "I am sure that my husband is a good, honest man, reverencing purity."

"Yet life is very sweet," the governor reminded her.

"Honor is sweeter to honorable men."

Rhynsault leaned down a little from his fine height. He spoke persuasively. "What need he know, since you are so tender of his feelings? A thing done in secret is as a thing not done at all."

That brought her to her feet in rage. "You pitiful knave! You infamous villain!"

He flushed, but kept his temper. "If I am that, it is love has made me so."

"Love?" She flung the word at him in deepest scorn.

"Ay, love," he insisted. "Love such as you have never known."

"And never shall, please God," she answered him.

For a long moment he stood meeting the defiance of her glance, pondering the lissom grace of her figure so stiffly erect, the proud poise of her golden head, the distracting, maddening beauty of her delicate face. The wolf was aroused in him, yet dominated by the perception that to prevail he must here play the fox. He commanded himself, clenching his hands until the nails bit into his palms. He smiled a little, very wistfully, and fetched a sigh that was pure artifice.

"So! You are resolved, then, to let him die?"

"I have prayed to our Father in heaven to purge the evil from your heart, to let the light of grace fall upon your soul before it is too late, before . . ."

Abruptly he strode to the door, flung it wide, and called the officer of the guard by name.

"Cassaignac!"

A voice answered from the distance. Approaching steps rang hollow in the vast hall outside. Turning where he stood, Rhynsault spoke to her in dismissal, harshly.

"You had best return home, madam."

Confronting this finality, her panic momentarily returned. "Ah, no, no! Wait! Wait!"

His white face sneered at her. "Wait!" he echoed. "I have waited already a week. What am I to wait for now? Another sermon?"

She staggered where she stood, one hand clutching her heart. Then, realizing indeed that all was lost, she gathered up her cloak and drew it about her shoulders.

Leaden-footed she moved towards the door and the waiting officer. Midway she halted.

"You'll give me leave to see my husband before . . . before . . ."

"Why should I deny you that? But time grows short. If you would see him, you had best see him now. At once."

Without awaiting her reply, he ordered Cassaignac to bring Danvelt from his prison and allow him to have speech alone with his wife in the hall. Then he held the door for her while she passed out to await the coming of her husband.

If Johanna's time of waiting was an agony, the first sight of him when at last they brought him to her was even worse. He was scarcely recognizable for the man he had been a week ago. The healthy fullness of his cheeks was gone; the great bony structures of his face stood gauntly forth from the stretched yellow skin, and his eyes, which seemed to have receded in their sockets, burned feverishly. He no longer walked with that slight, swaggering roll and the forward thrust of his chin, but moved slowly and stiffly, bending forward like an old man.

The first sight of him wrought in her such an uprush of pity and womanly tenderness that she ran to meet him, to enfold him in her arms. But he almost shrieked in her embrace, whereupon her arms were instantly relaxed and melted from him. She fell back in dismay.

"You . . . you hurt me!" he gasped, and added the explanation: "I have been racked until I am one living ache." He looked at her fearfully with those burning eyes about which the shadows were so heavy. He mumbled explanations to her. "I stood as much as flesh and bone could bear. Then, when I could endure no more, when I was stark mad with pain . . . I threw away my life to buy a moment's ease. I said what they wanted me to say. I would have said anything, anything that was required of me. I confessed that I had written that letter to that man . . . What is his name? I have forgotten it. No matter."

She was kneeling beside him, an arm very gently set about his shoulders.

"A week ago," he babbled on in his weak, plaintive voice, "we hadn't a single care to trouble the sweetness of our lives. Tomorrow . . .!" He broke off, shuddering violently again. "Why did you come, Johanna? You should not have come. I was man enough until I saw you. Your coming has . . . has made a child of me."

"How could I not come?" She spoke in tones calculated to soothe his unreason. "How could I refrain from attempting to move that dreadful man? I warned him that God's vengeance will overtake him. But such as he are dead of soul. He only mocked my warnings."

"Yet he allowed you to see me. That at least was considerate in him."

"Oh, yes; he is considerate; considerate to himself," she answered with incautious bitterness, "thinking to further his evil hopes."

"Hopes?" He stared at her. "What hopes?"

"That . . . that is no matter."

But he was not to be put off.

"What hopes had he? Tell me. You must tell me."

She lowered her voice until it was hardly more than a whisper, so that he had to strain to catch her words. "He offered me your . . . life . . . at a price."

Danvelt gasped. He could hardly believe his ears. Hope was suddenly reborn in him. It throbbed through his being, shortening his breath, deepening if possible the pallor of his ghastly cheeks. "What . . . what do you mean?" His voice quavered. "Do you mean that he offered to sell you my life? Why, then, in that case . . ."

At once she perceived the mischief of hope she had wrought, but to add to his mental torment. A sob convulsed her, a sob of pity for him.

"Ah, but the price, my dear!" she cried, assuming that from her very tone he must guess the truth.

But his wits, never penetrating, were now as dull as lead. "Price?" he echoed. "What price could be too high to pay for life?" Excitement grew in him. "Does that covetous captain want all our wealth? Then yield it to him. Yield all so that I may live."

She interrupted him, her hands now clutching the arms of his chair. "Can you dream I should have hesitated had it been but that? Oh, don't you understand? The price he proposed to me was to be paid by me. By me."

He stared at her, and slowly understanding pierced those heavy wits of his. The light of hope perished in his eyes, like a candle that is blown out. He covered his face with his emaciated hands.

"The dog!" she heard him mutter.

There was a silence, at the end of which she spoke very softly and gently. "You see, my dear. You could never have forgiven it, or . . . or done other than loathe me if I had paid such a price as that for your life."

Presently he asked a question: "And you? What . . . what did you answer him?"

"As you would have me answer."

Slowly he nodded. "You refused."

He continued to sit there staring straight before him into vacancy, into realms visible only to the eyes of his spirit.

She came slowly to her feet, a tumult of thought distracting her. Yet she spoke quietly.

"There is nothing, Philip, that I would not do to serve you; no sacrifice I would not now make for you, save one. And even this one I would make at your own bidding; but only at your bidding; so that afterwards you should have no right to spurn or reproach me, since the act would then be more yours than mine."

"Bid you?" he cried. "I bid you commit this infamy against yourself? This horror?" He paused, wrestling with temptation, and when at last he completed his answer, it was but to give reasons why he could not complete it as she asked. "How can I bid you? It would shame my manhood."

"Why, then . . . You see, Philip?"

"See? What do I see?" The conflict within him between his self-respect and his fear between his manhood and his will to live, came forth in a torrent of petulance. "O, Heaven! Don't ask me such questions! Don't tempt me with them! It is to agonize a man in my extremity. I love my life. It is as sweet to me as the thought of death is horrible. Perhaps . . . perhaps this horror distorts my judgment, for to me it seems, it seems . . ." He hesitated, still in prey to that conflict, then abruptly added: "It seems that a defilement is the lesser evil." Then, in a voice of despair again. "I do not know; I should not be asked. A defilement may be cleansed away. A life that is put out can never be rekindled."

She looked at him, and her eyes were as dtad eyes in a face of stone. "Then bid me to do it, Philip. I will obey you now, if you command me."

He struggled up in a state of revulsion. Perhaps her tone had brought him a measure of self-contempt. "No, no!" he cried. "Never! I will never command you to that. I neither beg nor bid it, Johanna. Do you understand? I forbid it! I forbid it! Do you hear, Johanna?"

"I hear you, Philip," she answered very steadily.

The door at the end of the hall was opened, and Cassaignac came in to announce that it was time for Master Danvelt to return to his cell.

He shuddered at that summons and clung a moment to Johanna, who stood silent and rigid.

"Pray for me, Johanna, if . . . if we do not meet again. God keep you, wife. God keep you!"

"God help you, Philip," she answered him.

Sunday Health Talks

—By—
William Brady, M. D.

IRENEXULTANT in victory and courageous in defeat though I am not, when I take on an alleged champ, for a game of checkers and find myself in such fine fettle that I finish whilst he is still scheming to get to my king row, I like to emit a hearty and candid laugh and try to cheer the poor fellow up. If that isn't good sportsmanship so much the worse for sport. I never could admire these fine fellows who make believe it's just too bad when they beat you.

My old friends will perhaps be interested to know that I am still sailing along with my challenge to the world in general to prove that the skin absorbs anything. Likewise I enter upon my 17th year of newspaper health service with my banner still floating proudly at the top of the mast with my defi: There's no such thing as a cold—and the old flag shall stay there till some one convinces me I should haul it down and edit it.

Traditionally "taking cold" and "rheumatism" are closely associated. Nearly every one who believes that one can, under certain conditions, really get some illness from mere exposure to cold or wet believes firmly in the entity called rheumatism. Such belief is probably strengthened by the unfortunate fact that good physicians, especially in England but to I regret to say in America, too, cling to the term "rheumatic feevr" or "acute rheumatism" or "chronic rheumatism." There may be still preserved ancient medical bocks in which the distinguished authors give their notions about rheumatism from exposure to cold, dampness and the like. But I venture to say that no medical authority has had the temerity to publish or utter any such drivel in the past ten years, and to back this up I promise to send a good health book of some kind to any reader who can cite evidence to the contrary. Even in England, while they cling to old ideas more tenaciously than we do here, physicians all recognize that the ailment or ailments designated as "rheumatic" are caused by infection, usually by a train or type of germs called streptococcus, and this streptococcus, in most cases, first finds lodgment in the region of the tonsils.

Tonsilitis and sore throat are two of the many troubles the old timers nonchalantly dubbed "colds," are they not? Well, there you are.

I suggested here the other day that a little cod liver oil ration is fine to stave off the rheumatism.

Now I wish to add that the same thing, cod liver oil, is very good indeed for children who are developing enlarged tonsils and adenoids. Just the plain undoctored cod liver oil, as fresh as possible, is best. Let the child take —huh, that's good, "Let him take" a tablespoonful a day, except in hot summer weather, when he can get the same effect from going barefoot or otherwise exposing his skin to sunlight and getting a moderate coat of tan. For those who cannot be persuaded to take C. L. O., there is now available a concentrate which contains the necessary vitamin, but I hesitate to recommend these concentrates because they are so very expensive, and, of course, can not give you a thing you do not get more certainly in plain C. L. O.

Seven hundred and ten of a thousand tonsils examined by Dr. Albert S. Welsh, after removal of the tonsils in a dispensary in a midwest city, he reported in 1927, had never been seriously affected. How come they were removed, then? Oh, I dunno, maybe the well kids got mixed in with the adenoid crowd being taken to the dispensary by the nurse, school teacher, social service worker or somebody and gosh, when we're operating wholesale we can't stop and examine every case. The nurse wheels in the patient already anesthetized and tells us "another tonsil and adenoid" and we proceed to take out whatever we find. Dr. Welch gives a hint about this in his report. He says: "When several pairs of tonsils were removed on the same day from different members of the same family, one pair usually bore evidence of infection and the others were not altered." Not altered means, of course, normal tonsils. You understand how that happens—young Stanislaus really has enlarged tonsils, kernels in his neck, maybe even the "adenoid" expression so dear to the heart of the tin doctor. When the lady comes to get Stanislaus, his brother Mike and his sister Olga and maybe one or two of the neighbor kids are there, so the nice lady takes the whole bunch along, might as well have 'em all fixed up and save trouble.

In citing these statistics and wise-cracking about them, I seek to warn the public against the evil described. I am not exaggerating nor minimizing the situation. I am giving what I know to be the plain truth.

On the other hand, I call attention to the fact that Dr. Welch found 290 of the tonsils removed in the dispensary diseased, infected, abnormal. The 290 tonsils were well out. I believe 290 is not a bad batting average. I would point out that in private practice this average would be much higher. For in private practice doctors simply do not cut out tonsils until they've made reasonably sure the tonsils are infected or abnormal. Of course, a doctor's judgment may fail sometimes, and the tonsils he removes may prove to be unaffected. But that's one of the hazards of the game and no health seeker can complain about it.

I have played up the scandal of the 710 good tonsils for the purpose of taking the wind out of the sails of some of my medical colleagues who are inclined to be a little too arbitrary about the proper method of extirpating tonsils. Whether I have played fair or not doesn't matter. I was forced to play this way. But I want to make clear to readers that the diathermy extirpation of tonsils (electrocoagulation, electrodesiccation) which I have recommended is only an alternative method, and surgical tonsillectomy is still good practice in certain cases. Surgery is impracticable in not a few cases, in which it is imperative that infected tonsils be extirpated, and here diathermy is the alternative. No physician who is true to his patient can deny this boon to the handicapped patient. No doctor who knows his theraupeutics can longer withhold this alternative remedy on the plea that he thinks it is "still in the experimental stage" or "it is not yet accepted by the majority of the profession."

The suggestion of cod liver oil and sunlight as preventatives against enlarged tonsils and adenoids is really the first bit of scientific knowledge we have acquired in regard to the prevention of this very common condition in children. I hope readers who have the care of young children will bear it in mind. Whenever you see or hear of a child with enlarged tonsils don't think "Oh-oh." Think "V-V"—the poor kid has probably not had a fair share of Vitamin A and ultra-Violet.

For that matter, every baby should be given a cod liver oil ration, beginning with maybe five drops a day at the age of six weeks, and gradually increasing the daily dose till at six months the baby takes half or a whole spoonful daily. This not only prevents rickets (Vitamin D) but also adenoids, enlarged tonsils and cri.

Now that I have wished cod liver oil on the children, who have certainly done me no harm, let me suggest, first, that if the parents or guardians permit no pantomine or word to impress upon the child the disagreeable taste of cod liver oil, the child will take it smilingly. Almost always a repugnance for this in children is taught by those who have the care of the child.

Finally, if there is a repugnance already developed, then there are available several excellent brands of cod liver oil with syrupy malt, which are not at all unpleasant to taste.

AT TWILIGHT

man she knew that he would have attacked her, like a cornered rat.

Even as she thought of the danger she had just escaped she heard Fay's voice ringing out from the garden path. She was evidently calling to her escort in the car.

"Don't wait. I'm all right. My aunt will be frightfully thrilled at the news. She's been windy about me."

Miss Luck made an impotent gesture as though to arrest the car. But she heard its exhaust roar as it hummed down the road like an express train.

Cheerily Fay's signal knock sounded on the front door. In imagination Miss Luck could see her standing outside—her cheeks colored by her ride, her dark elf locks blown and her eyes shining with excitement. She had a tale to unfold.

Instantly the dark figure crept forward, while the light flashed upon something in his hand. Then Miss Luck understood the ultimate horror. A gentleman with a razor was waiting to open the door to Fay.

That moment was to remain as her bitterest memory. She recognized it as the peak of her life. All its events had led up to this climax when she would expiate her cowardice in a blaze of heroism. She had prayed for a miracle to happen. . . .

But miracles follow the working of the natural law. Because Miss Luck had violated this law—starving each feeble flicker of courage while she pampered her nerves—the moment of trial brought its logical fulfilment.

No rush of mysterious power flooded her veins. Instead, she stood paralyzed, like a rabbit hypnotized by a snake. She tried to move, but her limbs were stiffened as though her muscles were tied. Her strength oozed away through every pore. Her tongue felt so swollen that it seemed to stopper her throat.

"Fay! Don't open the door!"

Her lips framed the words—but the only sound that issued from them was a tiny gasp.

With the sensitized ears of his species, the snake heard. He darted forward, the razor flashing in his hand. As he sprang, terror snapped the spell which bound Miss Luck. All thought of Fay was swept away by sheer, blind panic. She turned to run. As she did so, the loose carpet unrolled under the foot and the tense moment of climax slurred down into anti-climax.

Miss Luck fell down the stairs.

She dropped, like a stone, with twice the force of her stupendous weight, hitting the snake just over his heart so that he collapsed, like a crumpled paper bag. Winded and prostrate, Miss Luck awaited her end. . . . Then, as nothing happened, she opened her eyes. Underneath her lay something which felt boneless as pulp. Peering down, she saw a narrow chested, putty faced creature—an adder crushed flat by an elephant's foot. His sting was drawn, for his razor gleamed two yards away.

Miss Luck stared in astonishment at her handiwork.

"I—did—that!" she gasped.

It was in this moment that the miracle actually happened. As she gaped at the puny form, now beginning to twitch feebly under her weight, she suddenly realized her own strength.

A wonderous sense of release swept over her. She felt mighty and dominant, as though she were sitting on top of the world.

Outside the door Fay hunted for her key. She had just remembered that Elsie was out, so could not answer her knock.

As she entered the hall she was startled by the unfamiliar darkness. But her alarm was lost in surprise when she heard Miss Luck's feeble bleat magnified to a trumpet blast of triumph and scorn.

"Fay, bring the laundry cords, quick! I've squashed something here!"

WHAT HAS HAPPENED TO JUSTICE

After 3 hours and 15 minutes they brought in their verdict.

They said they found the defendant guilty and recommended life imprisonment.

Mrs. Dorr screamed and fainted and had to be carried out. Reviving as she was leaving the courtroom, she sceramed—

"Take her! Before God, she is the guilty one!"

Miss Margaret Dorr, pretty 21-year-old sister of the defendant, next fainted and the courtroom became all confusion, with women spectators moaning and fainting from the excitement. As for Dorr, he stood unmoved and walked quietly back to his cell between guards.

Judge Miller later refused a new trial, but granted a stay of sentence of thirty days. He also granted sixty days in which to appeal to the state supreme court. Dorr's attorneys said they woud appeal but, though there was plenty of talk about an appeal, it wasn't made. Dorr and his attorneys apparently decided to be satisfied with the verdict that had recommended mercy.

While Mrs. O'Brien awaited trial, her attorneys revealed the contents of letters that had passed between the two prisoners. One from Dorr read—

"I love you and I want to marry you. If we both get out of here I want to protect you and take care of you. I have told Rose that I love you, and she will call on you. Do not be afraid to tell her the truth. She knows everything."

Another letter from his stated—

"I have told Rose that I cannot control my heart and soul and that I still love you. I hope you will not prove another Judas, betraying me before the world. You know I did everything for you to protect you."

Genevieve O'Brien wrote in return—

"I am surprised that you believe I would be another Judas, after the statements I have made that I would not take the stand against you. I have gone to confession this morning. Get down on your knees and pray to God and He will help you out of this terrible predicament."

She went on trial before Judge Miller a few days after the Dorr trial ended. As Dorr had been in his trial, she was the principal witness in her own defense. She admitted she had been intimate with Dorr, but denied that there had been a conspiracy between them to do away with O'Brien. She denied she had ever said that Dorr had threatened to kill his wife and her husband.

The jury acquitted her on January 23, after being out 3 hours and 25 minutes.

Cheers and feminine squeals of delight greeted the verdict. Many women rushed up to congratulate the defendant. One gathered from their behavior that Mrs. O'Brien had been a woman greatly wronged. Had they witnessed the tragedy, seen the dreadful pursuit on that forgotten morning, heard the dying man gasping in tortured whispers—but they hadn't. They saw only a sad-faced little woman who had won their sympathy.

Besides, she was going to have a baby.

And now she has had her baby.

SECKATARY HAWKINS

Mother Matin

Shadow Loomis and I sat alone in my writing room behind the clubhouse, gloomy and disconsolate. Outside the window birds were singing, and the golden sunshine of a glorious day fell in a brilliant shower. The world seemed singing happiness; yet we two remained indoors to mope silently over that which was about to happen, and which was to make us all feel rather sad in this clubhouse down on the old river bank.

"Well," said Shadow, finally, as he rose from his chair and stood at the window, his hands shoved into his pockets, "today's the day, Hawkins."

"Yeah," I mumbled, as I sent my pen scratching over the page to hide my own feelings. "Stephen's going away—for good, Shadow. Seems like a shame, too—we'll never keep a good fellow like him on his river bank—"

"You'll never know how I have grown to like him, Hawkins! Those days I spent in the old red and green mansion with him. . . . boy! What a wonder he was! I never believed there could be a boy like Stephen the Strange!"

"Shadow, did you ever happen to see, while you were living up in that mansion, a box full of gold? Or any kind of money—in coins, mostly?"

"No, Hawkins. You must remember that I was watched very closely. I was never allowed out of sight of Happer Nam or the mad professor—you see I had to do a lot of singing to keep the crazy master of the mansion satisfied. Happer was afraid of his life, and kept me close to him in his own quarters. It was he who allowed me to get to the laboratory at times to send you those radio messages."

"Well, Shadow, now that all this other mystery is solved, I'd like to find out for sure whether or not there is a box of money up there, hidden in that mansion. The real estate man said there was, and he has three thousand dollars back rent coming to him for the mansion, which the mad professor never paid up—I just don't like to let that mystery go unsolved, that's all."

Shadow laughed and turned to me.

"Same old Hawkins!" He said. "If you didn't have something to figure out all the time, you wouldn't be happy—"

"No, Shadow, it's not that, but if there's a box full of money in that old mansion, it ought to be easy to find, once you put your mind down to it and figure out—"

"Hold on, here comes somebody up the path, Seck. By George! It's your friend—the real estate man, and he has another man with him—a stranger. Wonder what he wants?"

We didn't have long to wait. We found out quite soon why the real estate man was heading for our clubhouse. He said a few words to his companion, a well-dressed man who remained standing at the evergreens that line the river path, while the real estate man came alone into our clubhouse.

"The reason I came," he said, "is because I have a new tenant for the red and green mansion."

"Congratulations!" I said, stepping up and shaking his hand. "You're a wonder to get somebody to take the old house so quickly—you'll not lose much money on the rent now, will you?"

"Confound the rent!" he snapped, peevishly. "I'm out three thousand now on the last tenant, that old fool of a professor. And while I'm anxious to rent the place to this new man, I'm rather sorry to let him have it. Suppose he should find in it that box full of gold and silver coins and not say anything to me about it—"

"Suppose, first, that there is a box full of coins!" put in Shadow Loomis, sharply.

"All right, young man, but there is!" snapped the man right back, as he turned toward Shadow. "That I know! It's going to be just too bad, that's all, if we can't find the box."

"Why do you come here with your sad story?" asked Shadow, with a frown.

"Because," and the man turned his eyes again on me, "Jeckerson told me that if any one could find it, Seckatary Hawkins could. He said you had ways that were different than detectives' ways—the way to a boy's heart, for instance—to get him to tell—"

"You mean—" I broke in, sharply; "you mean I should make somebody tell—"

"Yes! Stephen—the boy who is called The Strange—"

"But he goes away today—"

"He has not yet gone! You can yet see him up at Doc Waters' office. He is waiting there, with his trunk packed—the bus is to call for him at 6 o'clock. I just left there. They told me there was a terrible scene—when they told his old nurse, Mother Matin, that she would no longer be needed to take care of Stephen! She raved for a while, but they got her quieted down. Stephen is leaving tonight—but you can see him, Hawkins."

I turned away from the man and walked over to the window and looked out.

"No," I said, finally, "I shall not see him again. I shall not bother him!"

The man stood for a while in silence. Then he turned and walked to the door.

"Well," he said, "I guess that's all there is to say, then. But I hate to let the mansion to this man—with that treasure hidden in it somewhere."

"Why shouldn't you?" I said, turning suddenly. "You can't have everything! If you want to find that treasure that you talk about, then don't rent the mansion. Keep it and he would put them back into the chest again—"

My tongue wanted to say what my mind told me to speak out—but something held me dumb. The chest! The wooden chest! He was admitting there was a wooden box full of coins—

"Here he is!" came a cry from the porch. And I recognized Jeckerson's voice. I looked up to see him and Doc Waters and Judge Granbery. "Here he is, gentlemen! I told you

"I have come back to you, Mother Matin," he said, softly.

empty, and search! Else go and give the key to the man who is waiting down there by the cedars!"

He turned without a word and went out.

* * * *

For a few moments Shadow and I stood in silence. Then Shadow stepped over to me, where I stood at the window, and laid one hand upon my shoulder, while he gripped my arm with the other.

"You're a brick, Hawkins!" he exclaimed in a low voice. "But I know what you were thinking—"

"Yeah? Well, it's the same thing you were thinking. He had the nerve to ask me to make Stephen tell something that wasn't any business of his. If there's money in that old mansion, it's not for him. Hold on, Shadow, here's somebody else coming—

A step sounded no the porch—

"I have come once more," came a soft voice, and we turned to face Stephen. How happy his face was now—and yet there was a sad expression about the eyes. "Once more, to say goodbye."

He held his hands out to both of us.

"Stephen!" whispered Shadow. "It's good to see you once more, Stephen. I shall never forget you—those days in the old mansion—under the hard hand of the master—"

Those days have gone, broke in Stephen, quietly, with a gentle pressure upon our hands, "and all is as God wills. I have slipped away from the Doctor and Jeckerson and the Judge—what fine men they are, and how happy you boys in this little clubhouse should be, to have them always watching over you. So different, you see, than the ones were were accustomed to have over us, Shadow, ruling with an iron hand—making us beg, when there was no need of begging—but we have poor old Mother Matin to thank for that—we never begged, and she would fill our pockets from the big wooden chest of coins—we would take them to the old master we would find him in Seckatary Hawkins' clubhouse. Hey, there, Stephen! What has become of Mother Matin?"

Stephen turned slowly and faced the three men upon the porch.

"Aye!" he said, softly and very quietly. "What, then, has become of her?"

"She's gone!" exploded Jeckerson. "Yes, gone, Stephen! We did not want to have her disappear like that, you know! After you go away to school we want to take care of Mother Matin, you know—"

"I should think you would," said Stephen, quietly, and he smiled at Jeckerson. Slowly his gaze left the detective's face and traveled to Doc's and then to the Judge's. "I should think any one would want to care for a poor old soul who has been so good to a lot of poor boys—"

"What, then, Stephen!" put in Judge Granbery, testily. "Do you know where she has gone?"

Stephen's face was grave for a moment, as he looked from Judge Granbery to Jeckerson, and then to Doc Waters. Slowly his grave expression gave way to a smiling one—

"No, I cannot say where Mother Matin has gone," he said, shaking his head slowly, "but she is a dear old soul. I, who never knew a mother nor a father, know well how kind she is. Within her dear old heart there is a lining of purest gold, that God in His goodness placed there for the benefit of homeless boys. Look at me—I am the ungrateful one! I should not have consented to leave her—to leave her alone—and when I bid her goodbye this morning, I believe I broke her heart!"

Silence filled the little clubhouse as Stephen's last words fell. For a few minutes no one felt free to break it. Only the birds in the trees outside my window—and then Stephen's voice rose again:

"She is alone! Mother Matin will be sad. She will seek again the scenes of her last happiness. She will go back to the place where she last saw her boys—the Lucky Thirteen—and she took care of us there. We were all happy with Mother Matin—I and those others who knew no other mothen then—and when those others of my Lucky Thirteen left to meet their rightful mothers and fathers, I alone was left to Mother Matin. To me she paid especial care, and for days she tended me when I was sick. Now I, too, go to leave her. Mother Matin cried this morning—wept upon my shoulder to see me go—and then, gentlemen, I cried, too. For I loved her! She is the only mother that I ever knew—that I shall ever know!"

Stephen was brave enough throughout his long speech, and held out his hands to the three men while he spoke. But his last words moved him, and he turned to me and laid his head upon my shoulders, and I could feel his whole body shake as he gave way to his tears.

"She will seek again," it was Judge Granbery's solemn voice speaking now in low tones, "the scenes of her last happiness. Jeckerson, I order you to lead the way to the red and green mansion, sir. There, sir, was the scene of Mother Matin's last happiness—when she still dreamed she would be needed as the foster-mother of this young Stephen the Strange, sir!"

* * * *

Jeckerson's automobile accommodated all of us, luckily, and we arrived at the red and green mansion within a short time. We found the real estate man and his new client upon the porch; they were dickering over something, which had held off the deal, and it seemed to me that the real estate man was glad that we had come.

"Oh, Judge Granbery," said the real estate man, "I'm glad you came. We have a point of law to settle before I lease this mansion to this man—"

"We have more to settle than that!" snapped the Judge, shortly. "Have you the key? Then open that front door!"

Once in the weird place, its atmosphere again assailed us all in the same moment. We walked slowly and softly on tip-toe through the hall—

"What's that?" cried the Judge, suddenly.

A low, wailing sound of weeping came to our ears. Under the broad stairs in the hall was a doorway, and to that doorway Stephen swiftly made. No use to say who was leader now. All of us followed Stephen the Strange. A partly open door under the stairs—steps winding in a narrow passage—down into that catacombs that had been carved out below the mansion—

And there we found her! Poor old Mother Matin! She had flung herself across a low, wooden table or crate, covered with a faded tablecloth. And there she was weeping!

"Oh, my boys!" she wailed. "My little lambs! They have taken you away from me! What shall I do now—poor old me—poor old Mother Matin shall die now! Oh, Jonas, Jonas! What shall become of you! And Timothy and Theodore! Oh, poor little lambs. They could not let me have you—you are gone from old Mother Matin forever—poor old Mother Matin who loved you. And now they have taken Stephen—my own beloved Stephen! No mother nor father has Stephen—and they have taken him, too—taken Stephen away from old Mother Matin—oh! alack and alack! Oh, Stephen! Come back to me, Stephen, come back to me!"

Stephen stepped away from us.

"I have come back to you, Mother Matin," he said, softly.

The poor old crone raised her tear-stained, withered face. She stared at the boy, as though he were a vision. Stephen held his arms out to her—she gave a cry, and then, with a look of joy upon her wrinkled face, she gathered him in her arms.

"No, Mother Matin," Judge Granbery was saying, after that last scene, "Stephen shall not be taken away from you. I shall arrange that you shall accompany him—"

"You know well enough that she can not accompany him to Laird's Military—"

"Who said anything about the military?" demanded the Judge. "Stephen has decided to enter the ministry. A great preacher he will be, I prophesy. I have the honor, gentlemen, to inform you that he shall pick out his own college, and Mother Matin shall stay with him in rooms that are suitable, furnished by funds that Mr. Jeckerson, and the boys in Seckatary Hawkins' clubhouse have provided. Is that all you wish to know?"

"Just one more thing, your honor," spoke up the real estate man, "about the box full of coins—"

"Here!" cried Mother Matin. And with a swish she tore the table cloth off the wooden chest upon which we had found her. "Here! This is the box! Lift the lid. Lift the lid, I tell you—there!"

Jeckerson and Doc Waters had lifted the lid—and there we stared at it—with eyes as big as saucers, I suppose, at the chest full of coins—gold, silver, nickel, copper—but coins worth a fortune—

"It's mine!" cried the real estate man. "I claim it—"

"You claim only $3,000 of it, sir!" exclaimed Judge Granbery, sharply eyeing the fellow. "Do you realize how much is in that chest? No, I guess you don't. That's quite a fortune, saved up by the mad professor. Well, Mother Matin has a word as to this money—"

The old crone thrust her hand into a pocket of her frock and brought forth a paper.

"He has given it to me, sir," she said, in a timid voice, handing the paper to the Judge. "He always said I should have it, when he should go, or if he were arrested, but I—I give it to my last lamb, sir—my Stephen—because I love him, sir! He is all I have in this world!"

Judge Granbery handed the paper to Stephen.

"And what have you to say, boy?" he asked.

Stephen waived the paper down.

"No," he said, "give me Mother Matin. I wish to be a preacher, sir. I need no money. Give it to—"

He paused. All of us were eyeing him.

"Yes," said the Judge. "Stephen, we shall do as you say. Give it to—whom?"

"To the orphans, sir!" exclaimed the strange boy, quickly; "to those who have no mothers and fathers, and may God bless them! Goodbye, sir, and goodbye to all of you. Come, Mother Matin—"

Stephen put his arm in that of Mother Matin, and led her out. That was the last I ever saw of them. Dear old Stephen! What a boy! And even as I watched them go back up those winding stairs, I was thinking! Yes, sir, I was thinking—wondering whether or not some day—somewhere—somehow—I would have the pleasure of seeing this strange boy once again!

"Well," the real estate man was saying, "at least you helped me to collect that $3,000, Hawkins!"

But I wasn't paying any attention to him. No. Shadow Loomis was tugging at my arm and asking me if I didn't think it was time that we both made tracks for the clubhouse. Bill Darby was getting peevish about us not practicing baseball, and our team really needed us, so Shadow said we ought to report at once.

Which we did.

Our Weekly Meeting

June days are wonderful days for boys and girls. Everybody has a smile and a song this time of the year, because June brings promise of many joys. First of all, there comes the end of the school year, and we are all glad to have a rest and some recreation. Poets have sung of June and its joys, and deservingly so because it is one of the months in which we find the beginning of the summer pastimes and pleasures.

So this week our contest is going to be about "June Days." You will have plenty to write about, so I need not suggest anything. The main thing is to sit down and write. This beautiful weather is apt to coax one away from the pen and ink, but when you think of it, only a little time is needed to write your letter or story or verse. The title must be about "June Days."

Every week we get new members who are just finding out about our club and the contests we hold each week. If any of your friends want to join the club, tell them to fill out the membership blank and send it with a stamp, and they will receive by return mail a club button and membership certificate. Then they will be entitled to take part in all of our contests.

The meeting will please come to order. Imagine yourself now sitting in one great assembly hall whose roof is the sky, and whose rows of chairs are the many states of our great union. Imagine yourself sitting next to members from Texas, Maine, California, Connecticut, Utah—from all over the country, and some from British West Africa, South America, Canada, China and other far-away places. They are all attending the meeting as it takes place on this page.

Our postcard circle consists of those members who enjoy exchanging postcards with members. It is growing each week by leaps and bounds, and is a most popular feature of our club.

Now we will introduce some members in different states of the union, and if your letter is here you are a lucky member, for you will receive a book of our club's earlier adventures down on the old river bank. We've had lots of mysteries to solve around that old river bank, and these books tell some very exciting adventures. But in order to win one, your letter must be introduced with some words of comment, like the following:

Here is a member in Georgia who is budding into a poet and wants the world to know it, and that's why we show it:

Dear Seck:
Here I come knocking at yOur door,
The I have never knocked before,
I'll be as nice as a baby cub,
If you only let me join your club.
I'm a girl ten years old,
And a nice girl, I've been told,
I am anxious for a book,
So I can read in a quiet nook.
Your, fair and square,
LUCY RUTH BEDINGFIELD,
Lakemont, Ga.

And now we introduce a little Ohio member who likes reading and stamp collecting:

Dear Seckatary Hawkins:
Every Sunday I read your exciting stories in the little clubhouse down on the old river bank. I think your club has a very good motto, and I am going to try and live up to it. My favorite hobby is reading, and next to it is stamp collecting. In our school we have a certain day that we have for clubs, and I am in the stamp club. It is lots of fun to see how large you can make your collection. I hope this letter wins for me one of your thrilling books, and I will be waiting for next Sunday to come around so I can read another of your fine stories.
Yours, Fair and Square,
LUNA DAWSON, 12,
3007 Berkshire Rd., Cleveland Hts, Ohio.

We next hear from a new member who lives away over on that side of the United States where we see the last of the sun when day is done:

Dear Seck:
I have never written before because I have just joined, but I would like very much to get a book. If I don't get one this time I will try again, for a winner never quits and a quitter never wins. I have just finished reading some of your stories, and they surely are good. I think that your club motto, "Fair and square" is real good, and I will try to keep it. I hope that some time I will be lucky enough to win a book.
Yours, fair and square,
ROBERTA McKNIGHT, 11,
1414 Bush St., Santa Ana, Cal.

Next we will introduce an Iowa member who saw real Indians in a war-dance:

Dear Seckatary Hawkins:
I hope to find this letter under the "Weekly Meeting" column. I have tried so many times, but if they do get in they are only under the "Mail Box" column. But I'll never give up. I'll "try, try again."
We didn't have much to do this afternoon at school. We saw the Indians perform. It was very nice. Chief Big Snake showed us how he made fire when he was young. They danced the "War Dance," "Buffalo Dance" and others. Then we got out at recess. I can't think of any more to say, for I am looking at a picture now. It has a verse on it which is:
"There's a long, long winding road
That never wearies me—
A road I often travel when Old friend I wish to see.
That road is called "Sweet Memory,"
So old, yet ever new.
And I oft in fancy wander there
To laugh and talk with you."
Yours, fair and square,
MARTHA GETZENDANER, 9,
2303 W. Third St., Davenport, Ia.

Girl members of our club will like to meet this Virginia member, who would like to have some pen pals:

Dear Seckatary Hawkins:
I received my badge and rules, and am very proud of them. I think the badges are so cunning, and if we would all live up to the rules we would be a fine bunch of boys and girls.
I am trying to get some of my friends to join your club, and have talked one of them into it, for she wrote you the other day. She and I are very good friends, and last summer with some other children near us organized a club of our own.
I was very unhappy when I found I had not won a book, but I will have to remember that a winner never quits and a quitter never wins. If the adventures in the book are as good as the ones in the paper, those books are dandies, I know. Well, even if I am not down on the river bank at the clubhouse, I will have to quit. I would be very interested if some of the other members would write me.
Always yours, fair and square,
JUANITA BOSSERMAN, 12,
204 Church St., Staunton, Va.

And now we must adjourn till next week, when we will hold another meeting on this very same spot. Don't forget—send in your letter and don't delay. And remember—if you don't win, don't give up! Never give up! Always get up and say to yourself: "I'm no quitter. I'll try till I succeed." And then you will.

Radio meeting this week on Saturday, 5 p. m., Eastern time, from Station WLW. Tune in and attend.

Bye till next week.
Yours, fair and square
Seckatary Hawkins

THIS PASSWOED WILL KEEP YOU GUESSING

Last week it seemed that every one of our members knew "Constantinople," and had very little trouble in figuring out the password.

But this week it is going to be harder work. Of course, if you have studied your history very well during the past year in school, you may get this one right off the bat; but if you haven't done so well in your history, it may be that you will help to ask your teacher to help you with this one. Here it is:

"COME IN, ADA."

The letters are all mixed up, of course, as usual with our passwords. Change them around, and when you have them properly arranged, they will spell the name of a place that was the seat of empire under Alexander the Great. That ought to give you the clue to solve it right off. That is, if you have studied your history well. Now then, let's hear from you.

HOW TO JOIN THE CLUB.

Every boy and girl who reads Seckatary Hawkins is invited to become a member of his famous club. It is a very big club and already has members in every state in the union, as well as Canada, and many foreign countries.

Fill out the membership blank at the bottom of this page. Write plainly. If you want a club badge be sure to enclose a two-cent stamp with your membership blank, and it will be mailed to you within a few days. No matter where you live, you can be a member of the Seckatary Hawkins Club. No matter how old you are—just fill out the membership blank and join.

A NEW CONTEST EACH WEEK

READ THE RULES CAREFULLY.

In this week's contest the title must contain the words "JUNE DAYS." You may write a letter or story or verse. Write on one side of paper only. Your composition must be written without any assistance from older persons. All contributions must bear the writer's full name, address and age. The contest will close Thursday. Prize winners will be announced June 15.

PRIZE: A SECKATARY HAWKINS BOOK.

Summertime is in the air,
I belong to Seck. Hawkins' club;
Because it's Fair and Square.
I have not written for a long time since I have written. I am glad you have solved the mystery of the red and green mansion. I am glad you have got home from your trip to Cuba. I would like to visit the "old river bank" and your club this summer but I guess I can't.
Yours, fair and square,
SAMUEL STEPHENS,

Summertime.

Good old summertime is near
And it will make the children happy everywhere.
Just think of of those peaches and cream,
And the reddest melons you've ever seen;
With beans and onions, tomatoes and corn,
Iced tea and fried chicken.
My, aren't you glad you're born
The grasshoppers hopping and
The bumblebees humming
All the birds are singing and the lizards running.
The fresh pond is waiting
With its water so fresh and deep
To receive our warm bodies with one great leap.
Then out of the water and into the shade,
A buttered biscuit and a big glass of lemonade.
This is what I call summertime.
ELDRED ADAMS (8),
Bishop, Ga.

Dear Seck:
Do you like to swim very much? My goodness, such a silly question for me to ask when you are down there on that good old river bank. I know you must have a good time.
Well, I hope you have a good and happy summer, and I hope that your life will always be full of as many friends as you have members of your club now.
MARGARET WOODWARD,
P. O. Box 95, Durham, N. C.

Dear Seck:
I am writing you to become a member of your club. I have been reading your page for several Sundays. Let me tell you who I am. I am 13 years of age, my birthday February 18. I have black hair and brown eyes; my hobbies are reading stories and games. I have a large flower yard. I like your motto, Seck. I hope you will have a good time this summer.
Yours, fair and square,
EULA C. BANKS,
Box 262, Covington, Ga.

Dear Seck:
I am 14 years old and in the eighth grade. I have brown hair, blue eyes and am 5 feet 3 inches. I like all sports very much.
This is a grand request for pen pals, Seck, and I hope a lot of boys and girls will write to me. I promise to answer all letters I get. They will have to write to me first, as I don't get this paper.
Yours, fair and square,
ELAINE HUGHES (14),
18 Blake Ave., South Milwaukee, Wis.

Dear Seck:
I have three bird houses and the blue birds are building in two of them and a wren in the other. I was going to the field one morning and the old cat was trying to get the young birds, so I scared her away and the next day she came back down there to get the birds again and my pet squirrel came and bit the cat, so she hasn't bothered them since.
Yours, fair and square,
MARVIN AYERS,
Route 2, Winston, Ga.

Dear Seck:
I live in the country and like it very much. I went to Pine Chapel Consolidated school last winter and was promoted to the eighth grade. I liked my teacher very much.
Seck, I surely do enjoy reading your stories. I do not miss reading a one if I can help it. I think your motto, "fair and square," is a good one. I also like your colors, blue and white.
Poor Stephen! I wish he had a home and parents like the rest of the "Lucky Thirteen." It surely was nice of you and the club members to give him your part of the reward.
Yours, fair and square,
JOSEPHINE PADGETT (11),
Oakman, Ga.

Dear Seck:
I like dear old summertime because you can get out and run, jump and play and can go down on the old river bank, go fishing and go in swimming. You don't have to study and have big old watermelons. I like your club better than any in the world because it is fair and square. I read your wonderful adventures every day of the week, your page every Sunday.
You have a wonderful motto, fair and square, and colors, blue and white.
CHRISTINE STORY,
Route 1, Sargent, Ga.

Dear Seck:
My, how I do enjoy the letters and the stories of your adventures. I know it must be wonderful to be a boy and have such thrilling times. Boys can have such good clubs though. Girls are always afraid to investigate things, especially at night.
We have organized a real "Seckatary Hawkins" club of which I am captain. We have many funny experiences on our picnics, hiking and fishing trips, but nothing real exciting ever happens to make us famous. However, many thanks are due to you for our fun and good times, as we never had an idea of having a club until we read about it in The Constitution.
Well, here's a description of me. Four feet 9 inches, blue eyes, brown hair, fair complexion set off with a few freckles. There—I hope all of you will like me, and write to me.
MINNIE ALLGOOD,
Drakestown, Ga.

Dear Seck:
I am a little girl 12 years old. My birthday is July 28. I have brown hair, brown eyes and I am 5 feet tall.
I read your adventures and I am very interested in them. I like your motto, fair and square. Have I a twin? If so, write to me.
Yours, fair and square,
CATHERINE HINES,
Palmetto, Ga.

Dear Seck:
This makes the second time I have written to you. I want you to tell all the boys who belong to your club to write to me and I will answer their letters for I love to read. I am staying with my uncle on a farm about one mile from Tifton. I like to plough. I have two brothers who would like to join your club.
Fair and square,

When Evening Comes

White Vies With Color and Organdie Competes With Silks and Laces

Evening frocks of various materials from many designers. Left to right—Ardanse, Goupy, Carette, Martial and Armand

VARIETY is the spice of dress. It is proved on this page. Here we have six evening dresses, sketched for us in Paris. No two are alike in material. Each is vastly different from the others in cut.

There are round necks, square necks, and V-shaped decolletages and a dress with practically no back at all. Yes, fashion is well spiced just now.

Chiffon is one of the best fabrics for the summer evening dress and white is an important color for this summer's chiffons.

With the vogue of the short, bright colored evening jacket in full swing there is ample opportunity for pleasing color effects. Little fitted jackets of emerald green, bright scarlet, tawny orange or black velvet, like those shown in old Godey prints, are seen over wispy, white chiffon frocks wherever smart women gather in the evening.

Point d'esprit frocks flutter in the breezes blowing across roof gardens at the dinner hour. A pretty one seen recently was of black point d'esprit made over yellow silk. Three flaring flounces formed the skirt. The neckline was square in cut and flaring frills made very short sleeves. Here and there among the flounces of the skirt bows of yellow velvet ribbon nestled.

Another dress seen at a smart outdoor restaurant was of white chiffon over lace. Shoulder straps and a belt of brilliants and black onyx high-lighted this gown.

It is reported that for immediate wear printed chiffon evening gowns are in great demand. These are practical for nights when the thermometer flirts with the hundred mark.

For warm evenings in the city or country there are wide-skirted organdie dresses picturesque enough to please the most romantic. These are the sort of dresses worn by bridesmaids at summer weddings heretofore. Now they are taken up by the slender and youthful for dining and dancing. Made over bright colored flowered silks they give the impression of a flowered fabric although the organdie itself is plain.

A wave of this crisp material is rippling over the country. Ambitious designers have made suits of organdie, consisting of a skirt and coat to be worn with sheer white blouses. The coats are of two layers of organdie. Organdie suits are not confined to the modest shades. Often they are of flaming red, bright blue, or emerald green.

Velveteen is unusual as a fabric for summer evening clothes, but this season it is used for hip-length capes bordered with heavy garlands of velveteen flowers. It seems to be a game, a sort of ring-around-a-rosy performance, this shifting of flower trimmings on summer wraps. Last year they blossomed on collars. This year collars are plain and the flowers run wild on other parts of the wrap.

Short velveteen coats are nipped in at the waistline to flare in perky peplums. Wide cuffs and collars of Directoire style adorn these coats. They are reminiscent of the paletots our grandmothers wore. Young girls like them so much that they are wearing them over tennis dresses as well as over dance frocks.

Lace continues to be important. Perhaps the most interesting thing about this fabric is the fact that designers at last have been able to make lace gowns youthful. Chanel led this movement when she made that charming black lace gown last season, a dress that was the very essence of youth. You will remember that it was long, slim, tight fitting and very much flounced at the bottom.

An American designer, Herman Patrick Tappe, created a delightful lace gown for Lillian Gish to wear in her new play, "Uncle Vanya." For it he used that lovely old-fashioned Irish lace, Carrickmacross, in a pale beige shade that is almost old ivory in tone. He made long gloves of the same lace to wear with the dress.

Flounces are used on the skirts and around the necks of lace frocks. One of the many ways in which youth is imparted to the lace dress is by stiffening the edges of these flounces with horsehair braid. In this way the heavier laces formerly used for the more mature gown are made youthful in effect. An evening gown seen recently was of very delicate lace, water green in color and had three deep ruffles on the skirt. It had a short lace jacket collared with beige ermine.

At Biarritz over Easter the outstanding note was the prevalence of plain colors. White was first; black, a close second. Pastel green and blue almost tied for third place. Red was seen only on Englishwomen and Americans, although a great deal of bright red or white with touches of flame color was shown at Molyneux's mid-season opening.
